PREFACE.

IT is the fate of thoſe who toil at the lower employments of life, to be rather driven by the fear of evil, than attracted by the proſpect of good; to be expoſed to cenſure, without hope of praiſe; to be diſgraced by miſcarriage, or puniſhed for neglect, where ſucceſs would have been without applauſe, and diligence without reward.

Among theſe unhappy mortals is the writer of dictionaries; whom mankind have conſidered, not as the pupil, but the ſlave of ſcience, the pionier of literature, doomed only to remove rubbiſh and clear obſtructions from the paths of Learning and Genius, who preſs forward to conqueſt and glory, without beſtowing a ſmile on the humble drudge that facilitates their progreſs. Every other authour may aſpire to praiſe; the lexicographer can only hope to eſcape reproach, and even this negative recompenſe has been yet granted to very few.

I have, notwithſtanding this diſcouragement, attempted a dictionary of the Engliſh language, which, while it was employed in the cultivation of every ſpecies of literature, has itſelf been hitherto neglected, ſuffered to ſpread, under the direction of chance, into wild exuberance, reſigned to the tyranny of time and faſhion, and expoſed to the corruptions of ignorance, and caprices of innovation.

When I took the firſt ſurvey of my undertaking, I found our ſpeech copious without order, and energetick without rules: wherever I turned my view, there was perplexity to be diſentangled, and confuſion to be regulated; choice was to be made out of boundleſs variety, without any eſtabliſhed principle of ſelection; adulterations were to be detected, without a ſettled teſt of purity; and modes of expreſſion to be rejected or received, without the ſuffrages of any writers of claſſical reputation or acknowledged authority.

Having therefore no aſſiſtance but from general grammar, I applied myſelf to the peruſal of our writers; and noting whatever might be of uſe to aſcertain or illuſtrate any word or phraſe, accumulated in time the materials of a dictionary, which, by degrees, I reduced to method, eſtabliſhing to myſelf, in the progreſs of the work, ſuch rules as experience and analogy ſuggeſted to me; experience, which practice and obſervation were continually increaſing; and analogy, which, though in ſome words obſcure, was evident in others.

In adjuſting the ORTHOGRAPHY, which has been to this time unſettled and fortuitous, I found it neceſſary to diſtinguiſh thoſe irregularities that are inherent in our tongue, and perhaps coeval with it, from others which the ignorance or negligence of later writers has produced. Every language has its anomalies, which, though inconvenient, and in themſelves once unneceſſary, muſt be tolerated among the imperfections of human things, and which require only to be regiſtred, that they may not be increaſed, and aſcertained, that they may not be confounded: but every language has likewiſe its improprieties and abſurdities, which it is the duty of the lexicographer to correct or proſcribe.

As language was at its beginning merely oral, all words of neceſſary or common uſe were ſpoken before they were written; and while they were unfixed by any viſible ſigns, muſt have been ſpoken with great diverſity, as we now obſerve thoſe who cannot read to catch ſounds imperfectly, and utter them negligently. When this wild and barbarous jargon was firſt reduced to an alphabet, every penman endeavoured to expreſs, as he could, the ſounds which he was accuſtomed to pronounce or to receive, and vitiated in writing ſuch words as were already vitiated in ſpeech. The powers of the letters, when they were applied to a new language, muſt have been vague and unſettled, and therefore different hands would exhibit the ſame ſound by different combinations.

From this uncertain pronunciation ariſe in a great part the various dialects of the ſame country, which will always be obſerved to grow fewer, and leſs different, as books are multiplied; and from this arbitrary repreſentation of ſounds by letters, proceeds that diverſity of ſpelling obſervable in the Saxon remains, and I ſuppoſe in the firſt books of every nation, which perplexes or deſtroys analogy, and produces anomalous formations, which, being once incorporated, can never be afterward diſmiſſed or reformed.

Of this kind are the derivatives length from long, ſtrength from ſtrong, darling from dear, breadth from broad, from dry, drought, and from high, height, which Milton, in zeal for analogy, writes highth; Quid te exempta juvat ſpinis de pluribus una; to change all would be too much, and to change one is nothing.

This

This uncertainty is moſt frequent in the vowels, which are ſo capriciouſly pronounced, and ſo differently modified, by accident or affectation, not only in every province, but in every mouth, that to them, as is well known to etymologiſts, little regard is to be ſhewn in the deduction of one language from another.

Such defects are not errours in orthography, but ſpots of barbarity impreſſed ſo deep in the Engliſh language, that criticiſm can never waſh them away; theſe, therefore, muſt be permitted to remain untouched: but many words have likewiſe been altered by accident, or depraved by ignorance, as the pronunciation of the vulgar has been weakly followed; and ſome ſtill continue to be variouſly written, as authours differ in their care or ſkill: of theſe it was proper to enquire the true orthography, which I have always conſidered as depending on their derivation, and have therefore referred them to their original languages: thus I write enchant, enchantment, enchanter, after the French, and incantation after the Latin; thus entire is choſen rather than intire, becauſe it paſſed to us not from the Latin integer, but from the French entier.

Of many words it is difficult to ſay whether they were immediately received from the Latin or the French, ſince at the time when we had dominions in France, we had Latin ſervice in our churches. It is, however, my opinion, that the French generally ſupplied us; for we have few Latin words, among the terms of domeſtick uſe, which are not French; but many French, which are very remote from Latin.

Even in words of which the derivation is apparent, I have been often obliged to ſacrifice uniformity to cuſtom; thus I write, in compliance with a numberleſs majority, convey and inveigh, deceit and receipt, fancy and phantom; ſometimes the derivative varies from the primitive, as explain and explanation, repeat and repetition.

Some combinations of letters having the ſame power are uſed indifferently without any diſcoverable reaſon of choice, as in cheak, choke; ſoap, ſope; fewel, fuel, and many others; which I have ſometimes inſerted twice, that thoſe who ſearch for them under either form, may not ſearch in vain.

In examining the orthography of any doubtful word, the mode of ſpelling by which it is inſerted in the ſeries of the dictionary, is to be conſidered as that to which I give, perhaps not often raſhly, the preference. I have left, in the examples, to every authour his own practice unmoleſted, that the reader may balance ſuffrages, and judge between us: but this queſtion is not always to be determined by reputed or by real learning; ſome men, intent upon greater things, have thought little on ſounds and derivations; ſome, knowing in the ancient tongues, have neglected thoſe in which our words are commonly to be ſought. Thus Hammond writes feeibleneſs for feaſibleneſs, becauſe I ſuppoſe he imagined it derived immediately from the Latin; and ſome words, ſuch as dependant, dependent; dependance, dependence, vary their final ſyllable, as one or other language is preſent to the writer.

In this part of the work, where caprice has long wantoned without controul, and vanity ſought praiſe by petty reformation, I have endeavoured to proceed with a ſcholar's reverence for antiquity, and a grammarian's regard to the genius of our tongue. I have attempted few alterations, and among thoſe few, perhaps the greater part is from the modern to the ancient practice; and I hope I may be allowed to recommend to thoſe, whoſe thoughts have been, perhaps, employed too anxiouſly on verbal ſingularities, not to diſturb, upon narrow views, or for minute propriety, the orthography of their fathers. It has been aſſerted, that for the law to be known, is of more importance than to be right. Change, ſays Hooker, is not made without inconvenience, even from worſe to better. There is in conſtancy and ſtability a general and laſting advantage, which will always overbalance the ſlow improvements of gradual correction. Much leſs ought our written language to comply with the corruptions of oral utterance, or copy that which every variation of time or place makes different from itſelf, and imitate thoſe changes, which will again be changed, while imitation is employed in obſerving them.

This recommendation of ſteadineſs and uniformity does not proceed from an opinion, that particular combinations of letters have much influence on human happineſs; or that truth may not be ſucceſſfully taught by modes of ſpelling fanciful and erroneous: I am not yet ſo loſt in lexicography, as to forget that words are the daughters of earth, and that things are the ſons of heaven. Language is only the inſtrument of ſcience, and words are but the ſigns of ideas: I wiſh, however, that the inſtrument might be leſs apt to decay, and that ſigns might be permanent, like the things which they denote.

In ſettling the orthography, I have not wholly neglected the pronunciation, which I have directed, by printing an accent upon the acute or elevated ſyllable. It will ſometimes be found, that the accent is placed by the authour quoted, on a different ſyllable from that marked in the alphabetical ſeries; it is then to be underſtood, that cuſtom has varied, or that the authour has, in my opinion, pronounced wrong. Short directions are ſometimes given where the ſound of letters is irregular; and if they are ſometimes omitted, defect in ſuch minute obſervations will be more eaſily excuſed, than ſuperfluity.

In the inveſtigation both of the orthography and ſignification of words, their ETYMOLOGY was neceſſarily to be conſidered, and they were therefore to be divided into primitives and derivatives. A primitive word, is that which can be traced no farther to any Engliſh root; thus circumſpect, circum-

ſpect,

ve, circumſtance, deluge, concave, and complicate, though compounds in the Latin, are to us primitives. Derivatives, are all thoſe that can be referred to any word in Engliſh of greater ſimplicity.

The derivatives I have referred to their primitives with as much accuracy as my materials would allow me; for why does not ſee that remoteneſs comes from remote, touch from to, confuſion from confuſe, and darkneſs from dark? but this grammatical exactneſs the ſcheme of my work did not always require. It is of great importance in examining the general fabrick of a language, to trace one word from another, by noting the uſual modes of derivation and inflection, and uniformity muſt be obſerved in ſyſtematical works, though ſometimes at the expence of particular propriety.

Among other derivatives I have been careful to inſert and elucidate the anomalous plurals of nouns and preterites of verbs, which in the Teutonick dialects are very frequent, to the great trouble of thoſe who have always uſed them, interrupt and embarraſs the learners of our language.

The two languages from which our primitives have been derived, the Roman and the Teutonick, or the Roman, the Greek, and the Gothick or German and its ancient dialects. Moſt of our monoſyllables are Teutonick, and the ſyllable are very often Teutonick.

In aſſigning the Roman original, it has perhaps ſometimes happened that I have mentioned only the Latin, when the word was borrowed from the French, and conſidering myſelf as employed only in the illuſtration of my own language, I have not been very careful to enquire whether a word be pure or barbarous, or the French elegant or obſolete.

For the Teutonick etymologies, I am chiefly indebted to [illegible] I have forborn to quote when I copied their books; not that I might appropriate their labours or uſurp their honours, but that I might not miſlead the learned by conducting them to conſult authors, whom I ought not to mention but with the reverence due to inſtructors and benefactors. Junius appears to have excelled in extent of learning, and Skinner in rectitude of underſtanding. Junius was accurately ſkilled in all the northern languages, and perhaps had collected his etymologies only by occaſional inſpection into dictionaries; but the learning of Junius is often of no other uſe than to ſhow him a track by which he may himſelf return from the purpoſe, and to ſhow others the ſhorteſt way. Skinner is often ignorant, but never ridiculous: Junius is always full of knowledge; but his variety diſtracts his judgment, and his learning is very frequently diſguiſed by [illegible]

The notions of the northern nations which perſons of learning have formed of the name of Junius this degree, by a [illegible] his diligence, his attainments, &c. to be no ſmall degree of [illegible] ing his want of judgment will eaſily be diſcovered from the following words, and a drama is a dream; and who declares with a tone of defiance, that no man can fail to derive moan from μόνος, monos, who conſiders that grief naturally loves to be alone *.

Of the [illegible] northern literature [illegible] I have [illegible] Junius, [illegible] tates, which I conſider not as radical but parallel, not as the parents, but ſiſters of the Engliſh.

The words [illegible] repreſented as thus related by different [illegible] form [illegible] to their [illegible] to deduce from the [illegible] their [illegible] It is ſufficient to [illegible] ſhow [illegible] that may [illegible] into each other [illegible] more general idea.

The etymology, ſo far as it is yet known, was eaſily found in the volumes where it is particularly and profeſſedly delivered; and, by proper attention to the rules of [illegible] the [illegible] aphereſis [illegible]. But to [illegible] the words of [illegible] was to [illegible] ſometimes [illegible] to diſcover apparent, and [illegible] was [illegible], what was [illegible] what was ſought by ſtrained and forced [illegible] books, and [illegible] ſhould find, or chance ſhould offer it, in the boundleſs chaos of a living ſpeech. My ſearch, however, has been either ſkilful or lucky; for I have much augmented the vocabulary.

* That I may not appear to have ſpoken too irreverently of Junius, I have here ſubjoined a few Specimens of his etymological extravagance.

As my deſign was a dictionary, common or appellative, I have omitted all words which have relation to proper names, ſuch as Asian, Socinian, Cartesian, Benedictine, Mahometan; but have retained thoſe of a more general nature, as Heathen, Pagan.

Of the terms of art I have received ſuch as could be found either in books of ſcience or technical dictionaries, and have often inſerted, from philoſophical writers, words which are ſupported perhaps only by a ſingle authority, and which being not admitted into general uſe, ſtand yet as candidates or probationers, and muſt depend for their adoption on the ſuffrage of futurity.

The words which our authours have introduced by their knowledge of foreign languages, or ignorance of their own, by vanity or wantonneſs, by compliance with faſhion, or luſt of innovation, I have regiſtred as they occurred, though commonly only to cenſure them, and warn others againſt the folly of naturalizing uſeleſs foreigners to the injury of the natives.

I have not rejected any by deſign, merely becauſe they were unneceſſary or exuberant, but have received thoſe which by different writers have been diſtinctly formed, as fearful, fearfully, fearfulneſs, and viſcoſity.

Compounded or double words I have ſometimes inſerted, though they obtain a ſignification different from that which their components have in their ſimple ſtate. Theſe agreeableneſs, unalterable, require an explanation, but of ſelf-denial, ſelf-lover, ſelf-murder, no example can be wanted, becauſe the parts contain the meaning of the compound.

Words arbitrarily formed by conſtant analogy I have inſerted; as lovely, lonely, lonelineſs, gloomineſs, gloomy, gloomily, and ſome others, which I have omitted, when I had no reaſon to ſuſpect that they were deſignedly made, and ſometimes have been reſtored, when I had reaſon to believe them not made but regiſtred. Many words ending in ly I have not admitted, when I had no reaſon to ſuſpect that they were intended for any other purpoſe than to expreſs in a commodious manner the adjective with the ſubſtantive like; not that they are not genuine and regular offſprings of English roots, but becauſe their relation to the primitive being always the ſame, their ſignification cannot be miſtaken.

The verbal nouns in ing, ſuch as the reading of the ſtudent, the learning of the philoſopher, are always neglected, or placed only to illuſtrate the uſe of the verb, except when they ſignify things as well as actions, and have therefore a plural number, as dwellings, lodgings, or have an abſolute and abſtract ſignification, as coloring, painting, learning.

The participles are likewiſe omitted, unleſs, by ſignifying rather qualities than action, they take the nature of adjectives, as a prepoſſeſſing appearance, a man of prepoſſeſſing air, a horſe that can paſs the ring. I have ventured to call paſſant, prepoſſeſſing, and the like, participles; but rather conſider them as adjectives, becauſe they are commonly to be underſtood, without any danger of miſtake, by conſulting the verb.

Obſolete words are admitted when they are found in the laſt tranſlations of the Bible, or in books not obſolete, or when they have any force or beauty that may deſerve revival.

As compoſition is one of the chief characteriſtics of a language, I have endeavoured to make ſome reparation for the negligence of my predeceſſors, by regiſtering great numbers of compounded words, which may be found in almoſt every page, and ſometimes in every ſentence, of our writers. Theſe, numerous as they are, might be multiplied, but that the uſe and authority are here attached, and the analogy of our language and modes of our combination amply diſcovered.

Of ſome forms of compoſition, ſuch as that by which re is prefixed to make it expreſs repetition, and un to ſignify contrariety or privation, all the examples cannot be accumulated, becauſe the uſe of theſe particles, in both ſenſes, is arbitrary, and ſo little limited, that they are hourly affixed to new words as occaſion requires, or is imagined to require them.

There is another kind of compoſition more frequent in our language than perhaps in any other, from which ariſes to foreigners the greateſt difficulty. We modify the ſignification of many verbs by a particle ſubjoined, as to come off to eſcape by ſtratagem, to fall on to attack, to fall off, to apoſtatize, to break off to ſtop abruptly, to break, to ſtop, to fall, to comply, to cool, to recede; to ſtop to embelliſh, to ſtrike, to begin a continual tendency, to ſet, to ſet out, to begin a journey, to take off to copy with an immeaſurable variety of the ſame kind, of which ſome appear wholly irregular, being ſo far diſtant from the ſenſe of the ſimple words, that no ſagacity will be able to trace the ſteps by which they arrived at the preſent uſe. Theſe I have noted with great care, and though I cannot flatter myſelf that the liſt is complete, I believe I have ſo far aſſiſted the ſtrangers of our language, that the moſt copious collection of phraſal verbs will be no longer neceſſary, and the common combinations of verbs and particles, by chance omitted, will be eaſily explained by compariſon with thoſe that may be found.

Many words yet ſtand ſupported only by the name of Johnſon, Addiſon, Pope, or the contracted Dict. or Dicenar. ſubjoined of the laſt I am not always certain, that they were read in any book but the works of lexicographers. Of theſe I have omitted many, becauſe I have never found them, and many I have inſerted, becauſe they may perhaps exiſt, though they have eſcaped my obſervation. They are, however, however, to be yet considered as resting only upon the credit of former dictionaries. Others, which I cannot receive as useful, or know to be proper though I could not support them by authorities, I have allowed to stand upon my own attestation, claiming the same privilege with my predecessors of being sometimes credited without proof.

The words, thus selected and disposed, are grammatically considered they are referred to the different parts of speech, traced, where they are irregularly inflected through their various terminations, and illustrated by observations, sometimes of great or striking importance sometimes perhaps merely critical but necessary to the elucidation of our language, and alike to neglected or forgotten by English grammarians.

That part of my work on which I expect malignity most frequently to fasten is the Explanation, in which I cannot hope to satisfy those, who are perhaps not inclined to be pleased, and do I have not always been able to satisfy myself. To interpret a language by itself is very difficult, many words cannot be explained by synonyms, because the idea signified by them is not more than one application nor by paraphrase because simple ideas cannot be described. When the nature of things is such, that the notion admitted and indefinite, and varies in various minds the words by which such notions are conveyed, or such things denoted, will be ambiguous and uncertain. And such is the fate of lexicography, that not only words of doubtful and controverted use, but light modes and evident things have not only by others but sometimes by each writer been sometimes unknown to be empty sounds. The dispute about the use of terms is a dispute about that which is to be explained and therefore cannot easily be found, for as nothing can be proved but by supposing something antecedently known, so nothing can be defined but by the use of words too plain to admit a definition without proof, so nothing can be defined but by the use of words too plain to admit a definition.

Other words there are, of which the sense is too subtle and evanescent to be fixed in a paraphrase; such are the particles, which are in the grammarians termed expletives, which are used to grace the periods, or to stop the ear to fill a verse, or to couple sentences in which we can perceive a beauty to which we are not able to give power and emphasis to which we have no other form of expression can convey.

My labour has been much increased by words of various meanings, and complicated construction, of which the signification is so loose and general, the use so vague and indeterminate, and the senses detorted, widely from the first idea that it is hard to trace them or to explain the motive of translation, to catch them on the brink of utter inanity, to circumscribe them by any limitations, or interpret them by any words of distinct and settled meaning: such are to bear, to break, to come, to do, to get, to give, to go, to make, to put, to take. If of these the various senses could be fully explained, it would be unnecessary to say, that I have not always succeeded, but that I have endeavoured something and perhaps by the frequency of their recurrence one of the first rules of interpretation, that words are to be taken in their primitive sense, has been sometimes forgotten. In fact, these words are hardly worthy of their relations, and can be no more regularly explained than a grove, when its shades are agitated by a storm, can be accurately delineated from its picture in the water.

The particles are commonly arranged with so great latitude, that they are not easily reduced to any regular scheme of explication. This difficulty is not the fault of the writers, for they could not have performed more than other languages. I have laboured them with diligence, but with such success, as cannot be expected in a task, which no man, however learned or diligent, has ever yet performed.

Some words there are which I cannot explain, because I do not understand them, and many there have been and will be with which the same reader is unacquainted, but I would not therefore charge the omission on the author or on myself; ignorant whether I am not equally censured for explaining needless words, and for neglecting those which require explanation. In doubts what to receive, and what to reject, in suspense between different significations of words, or various combinations of phrase, I have always endeavoured to collect the voice of the people, and have therefore inserted no meaning which I did not find authorised by the use of writers. Where the word was not sufficiently explained by a single quotation, I have added more; where it admitted different senses, I have given all that I knew or could conjecture, but have not wantonly burdened the page with superfluous explications of evident words, or needless accumulations of authorities to support common significations. Some words I have noted as obsolete, or mentioned as improper, when they occur frequently in writers who have not the first claim to purity of diction, but I have sometimes left unnoticed words which I have never found but once or twice, lest in my zeal to escape the censure of others I should become myself guilty of the same fault, and lest I should be obliged to explain my own explanations. Thus, if I have omitted the word dactyl, or multiteer, I may freely, without shame, leave some obscurities to happier industry, or future information.

The rigour of interpretative lexicography requires that the explanation should be always commensurate to the word explained. This I have always endeavoured, but could not always attain. Words are learned exactly as they occur in use, a new term will be introduced, but learned with the first application rather than with the most comprehensive. It will be necessary to add the proximate word, and the different ways of using the same term can very rarely be apprehended, or the various consequences of any fact or position be collected, but from the various relations of the terms by which they are connected.

In every work of extensive alphabetical compilation, it will be required to mark the progress of its members through all the gradations of intermediate excellence, that rise from the first easy conception to the last hard attainment, so that every foregoing explanation should tend to that which follows, and the whole be regularly concatenated from the first notion to the last.

The chief obstacle, but not always practicable, to this desirable method, may be found in the nature of the things to be explained, which cannot always be arranged in such an order as entirely to exclude reciprocal use, or to avoid the frequent inconvenience of seeming to explain the same word by itself. Many terms are so nearly allied, and so much depend upon each other, that to define them all would require an immeasurable circuit of words, in which the same vocables would be sometimes inevitably repeated. When the radical idea branches out into parallel ramifications, how can a series of definitions be formed, of which the parts are not in their nature collateral? The shades of meaning sometimes pass imperceptibly into each other, and though on one side they appear sufficiently distinct, it is impossible to mark the point of contact. Ideas of the same race, though not exactly alike, are sometimes so little different, that no words can express the difference, though the mind may perceive it, when they are exhibited bited together, and sometimes there is such a confusion of acceptations, that discernment is wearied, and distinction puzzled, and perseverance hurries to conclude, by grouping together what she cannot separate.

These complaints of difficulty will, by those that have never considered words beyond their popular use, be thought only the jargon of a man willing to magnify his labours, and procure veneration to his studies by involution and obscurity. But every art is obscure to those that have not learned it: this uncertainty of terms, and confusion of ideas, is well known to those who have pursued any philosophical grammar, and if I have not expressed them very clearly, it must be remembered that I am speaking of that which words are insufficient to explain.

The original sense of words is often driven out of use by their metaphorical acceptations, yet must be inserted for the sake of a regular derivation. Thus I know not whether aestus is used for material heat or whether fragrant, in Lucretius, ever signifies the same with burning, yet such are the primitive ideas of these words, which therefore must be first explained, though without examples, that the figurative senses may be commodiously deduced.

Such is the exuberance of signification which many words have obtained, that [illegible] would be to collect all their senses; sometimes the meaning of derivatives must be sought [illegible], and sometimes deficient explanations of the primitive may be supplied in the train [illegible]. In any case of doubt or difficulty, it will be always proper to examine all the words of the same race; for some words will [illegible] repeat [illegible] than others, and all will be better understood, as they are considered in greater variety of structures and relations.

All the interpretations of words are not written with the same skill or the same success: things equally easy in themselves, are not all equally easy to any single mind. Every writer of a long work commits errours, where there appears neither ambiguity to mislead, nor obscurity to confound him; and in a search like this, many felicities of expression will be casually overlooked, many convenient parallels left forgotten, and [illegible] equal to the whole performance.

But many seeming faults are to be imputed rather to the nature of the undertaking than to the negligence of the performer. Thus some explanations are unavoidably reciprocal or circular, as bird, the female of the [illegible], the act of [illegible]; but these could not be avoided, unless the primitive words were explained by [illegible] into sepulture or interment, drier into deiccative, dryness into siccity or aridity, fit into paroxysm; for the easiest word, whatever it be, can never be translated into one more easy. But easiness and difficulty are merely relative, and if the present prevalence of our language should invite foreigners to this dictionary, many will be assisted by those words which now seem only to increase or produce obscurity. I have endeavoured to [illegible] and Runic interpretation, as to CHEER to gladden, or exhilarate, that every learner of English may be assisted by his own tongue.

The [illegible] and the supply of authorities, must be sought in the examples, subjoined to the various senses of each word, and ranged according to the time of their authours.

When first I collected these quotations, I was desirous that every quotation should be useful to some other end than the illustration of a word; I therefore extracted from philosophers principles of science, from historians [illegible], from theologists arguments and exhortations, and from poets beautiful descriptions. Such is design, while it is yet at a distance from execution. When the [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible] I found it necessary to [illegible] many volumes would [illegible] the [illegible], and reduce my transcripts very often to clusters of words, in which scarcely any meaning is retained; thus to [illegible] I was [illegible] the passages I have yet spared, which may relieve the labour of verbal searches, and intersperse with verdure and flowers the dusty deserts of barren philology.

[illegible] sometimes [illegible] to be considered as [illegible] of [illegible] of the [illegible], the word for the sake of which the [illegible] has been carefully preserved; but it may sometimes happen, by hasty detruncation, that the general tenour of the [illegible] is changed, the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

PREFACE.

... have I been from any care to grace my pages with modern decorations, that I have ſtu-
... rejected to ſmall examples and authorities, ſtrictly appropriated to the word under conſi-deration. Nor was I ... leaſt ambitious of displaying my own reading in the explanations of ſcarce words. On the contrary, ſcarce any have appeared to me more dark, obſcure, or uncertain in their original ſignification, and deviating forms, than words of Gothick ſtructure and phraſeology, from which it is my principal boaſt to have freed our tongue, by diſcarding the uncouth ſyntax of the groſſeſt ages, admitting among the variations of inflection, ſuch as may ſupply real deficiencies, ſuch as are readily adopted by the genius of our tongue, and incorporate eaſily with our native idioms.

... ſtrictly language has attained from its firſt rude ſtate to perfection ... well as of later refinement mote, ... may look with wonder, no longer understood. I have fixed Sidney's work for the ... beyond which I make few appeals. From the authors who ſtood in the times of Elizabeth, ... have derived the moſt copious ſupplies to the purpoſes of uſe and elegance. It has been my ... of theſe writers to enrich Johnſon and the tranſlation of the Bible the terms of ſcience poetry ... left in Spenſer and Sidney, and the ſtores of common life in Shakſpeare, few ideas would be loſt to mankind, for want of Engliſh words, in which they might be expreſſed.

... not ſufficient to have ſupplied what was wanting, it was alſo neceſſary to aſcertain what is determined by the uſe of words, to diſtinguiſh ſynonyms, to trace the ſhades of meaning, and
... the ſeveral ſenſes in which any word has been employed. For this purpoſe I have collected
... from books, and ſometimes preferred paſſages of leſs name to exemplify ſmaller variations of

Some words, indeed, ſtand unexplained by any citation, but they are commonly ſuch derivatives
... adverb, formed from their primitives by regular and obvious methods, or ſuch compounds of
... as occurring in books, or words of which I have reaſon to doubt the exiſtence.

There is more danger of cenſure from the multitude than the paucity of examples, authorities will ſometimes ſeem to have been accumulated without neceſſity or uſe, and perhaps ſome inſtances muſt be found, which might, without loſs, have been omitted. But a work of this kind is not eaſily to be completed with perfect ſelection; there are quotations which to one reader will ſeem ſuperfluous, that may be uſeful or pleaſing to another. Some will be deſirous to ſee the progreſs of a ſentiment through all its
... ſenſe will often extort from a paſſage, diverſified by different combinations, or, at leaſt, afford different ſhades of the ſame meaning. One will ſhew the word applied to perſons, another to things; one will expreſs an action, another a quality; one will prove the uſage of the word in preſent time from an ancient author, another will ſhew it extinct from a modern: a doubtful authority is corroborated by another of more credit, an ambiguous ſentence is aſcertained by a paſſage clear and determinate, the word, however often ſoever repeated, appears with new ſhades of meaning in different combinations, and every quotation contributes ſomething to the ſtability or enlargement of the language.

When words are uſed equivocally, I receive them in either ſenſe, when they are metaphorical, I adopt them in their primitive acceptation.

I have ſometimes, though rarely, yielded to the temptation of exhibiting a genealogy of ſentiment, by remarking how one author copied the thoughts or the diction of another. Theſe parallels are little more than ſpeculations, which might eaſily be contracted, did they not gratify the mind, by affording a kind of intellectual hiſtory.

The various forms of conſtructions occurring in the examples have been carefully noted, the

Yet theſe failures, however frequent, may admit extenuation and apology. To have attempted much is always laudable, even when the enterpriſe is above the ſtrength that undertakes it: To reſt

below his own aim is incident to every one whose fancy is active, and whose views are comprehensive; nor is any man satisfied with himself because he has done much, but because he can conceive little. When first I engaged in this work, I [illegible] examined, and pleased myself with a prospect of the [illegible] ture, the obscure recesses of northern [illegible], which I [illegible] I expected every hour to remove [illegible] I should display my acquisitions to mankind. When I [illegible] I resolved to show I knew it by my attention to things, to pierce [illegible] nature of every substance of which I [illegible] and exhibit every production of art or nature [illegible] all other dictionaries whether appellative or technical. But [illegible] at last to wake a lexicographer. I soon found that it is too late to look for instruments, when the work calls for execution, and that whatever abilities might be [illegible] perfect. I laid aside whatever I collected, to be [illegible] trusted the undertaking without end, in part [illegible] first experiments, but what I had not [illegible] gave occasion to another, that book referred to book, that to search was not always to find, and to find was not always to be informed; and that thus to pursue perfection, was, like the first inhabitants of Arcadia, to chace the sun, which, when they had reached the hill where he seemed to rest, was still beheld at the same distance from them.

I then [illegible] my design, determining to confine [illegible] to [illegible] which [illegible] by the [illegible] that I set [illegible] limits to my work, which would in time be finished, though not completed.

Despondency has never so far prevailed as to depress me to negligence; some faults will at last appear to be the effects of anxious diligence and persevering activity. The nice and subtle [illegible] of meaning were not easily [illegible] by a man [illegible] pen accuracy, and [illegible] of the necessity [illegible] of [illegible] the [illegible] Many [illegible] the distinctions which common readers [illegible] and [illegible] which [illegible] important by men versed in the philosophy [illegible] which no dictionary ever shall be accurately compiled, or skilfully examined.

Some senses however there are, which, though not the same, are yet so nearly allied, that they are often confounded. Most men think indistinctly, and therefore cannot speak with exactness; and consequently some examples might be [illegible] to either [illegible] the [illegible] be imputed to me, who do not form, but register the language, who do not teach men how they should think, but relate how they have hitherto expressed their thoughts.

The imperfect sense [illegible] some examples I [illegible] but [illegible] not remedy, and hope they will be [illegible] by innumerable passages [illegible] with propriety, and preserved with exactness, some shining with sparks of imagination, and some replete with treasures of wisdom.

The orthography and etymology, though imperfect are not imperfect for want of care, but because care will not always be successful, and recollection or information come too late for use.

That many terms of art and manufacture are omitted, must be frankly acknowledged; but for this defect I may boldly allege that it was unavoidable: I could not visit caverns to learn the miner's [illegible] take a voyage to perfect my [illegible] dialect [illegible] might [illegible] nor visit the warehouses of [illegible] shops of tradesmen, to gain the names of wares, tools and operations of which [illegible] found in books; what favourable accident, or easy enquiry brought within my reach, has not been neglected, [illegible] had been a hope [illegible] to glean up words [illegible] by [illegible] information, and contesting with the sullenness of one, and the roughness of another.

To furnish the academicians della Crusca with words of this kind, a series of comedies called la Fiera, or the Fair, was professedly written by Buonarotti; but I had no such assistant, and therefore was content to want what they must have wanted likewise, had they not luckily been so supplied.

Nor are all words which are not found in the vocabulary, to be lamented as omissions. Of the laborious and mercantile part of the people, the diction is in a great measure casual and mutable; many [illegible] terms [illegible] for some temporary [illegible] though current [illegible] times and places, are in others utterly unknown. This fugitive cant, which is always in a state of increase or decay, cannot be regarded as any part of the durable materials of a language, and therefore must be suffered to perish with other things unworthy of preservation.

[illegible] sometimes betray [illegible] appearance of neglect. He that [illegible] changes [illegible] which seldom occur, will suffer those to pass by unregarded, which he expects hourly to return; he that is searching for rare and remote things, will neglect those that are obvious and familiar: thus many of the most common and cursory words have been inserted with little illustration, because in gathering the authorities, I forbore to copy those which I thought likely to occur whenever they were wanted. It is remarkable that, in reviewing my collection, I found the word SEA unexemplified.

Thus

PREFACE.

Thus it happens, that in things difficult there is danger from ignorance, and in things eaſy from confidence, the one [illegible] afraid of great efforts, and diffident of [illegible] painful fearches, and paſſes with eaſe and rapidity over [illegible] ſecure for caution and vigour for ſkill, [illegible] times diſtracted in labyrinths, and diſſipated by different intentions.

A large work is difficult becauſe it is large, even though [illegible] its parts might ſingly be performed with facility, where there are many things to be done each muſt claim its ſhare of [illegible], and the progreſſor only when it tends to the whole, nor can it be expected that the ſtones which form the dome of a temple, ſhould be ſquared and poliſhed like the diamond of a ring.

Of the event of this work, for which, having labored it with ſo much application I cannot but have ſome degree of parental fondneſs, it is natural to form conjectures. Thoſe whom [illegible] perſuaded to think well of my deſign receive that it [illegible] promiſe, will perhaps be diſpoſed to imagine that [illegible] time and care have been [illegible] With this conſequence I am, [illegible] that I flattered myſelf [illegible] and [illegible] decay, that it is in his power to change ſublunary nature, or clear the world at once from folly, vanity, and affectation.

[illegible] however, accidents have been [illegible] that [illegible] but that [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] Dryden [illegible] Le Courayer [illegible] modern writer is not perceptibly different from that of Boccace, Machavel, or Caro.

[illegible] alterations of a language [illegible] very rare [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

PREFACE.

There is another cause of alteration more prevalent than any other which affects the present state of the world cannot be obviated. A mixture of two languages will produce a tongue different from both, and they will always be mixed, where the chief part of education and the means of honourable accomplishment is skill in ancient or in foreign tongues. He that has learned any one language well finds its words and combinations crowd upon his memory, and unless he has great watchfulness and constant recollection, will entangle his diction with borrowed terms and exotick expressions.

The great peſt of ſpeech is frequency of tranſlation. No book was ever turned from one language to another, without impairing or depraving the original. Such changes are always made, and always necessary. Whatever is given to the world as the work of an author, ſhould exhibit the ſame appearance, and be preſented to the reader in the ſame ſtate. Tranſlation, as it changes the ſentiments, will change the ſtyle; for where is the ſynonymous word that preciſely conveys the meaning of another? Even the ſame ideas will be varied by the different cuſtoms of nations, whoſe intercourſe introduces a mutual exchange of commodities and of words. Thus the Engliſh wit has paſſed through ſeveral ſignifications in a ſhort time, and the politeneſs of the preſent age will perhaps in another century be no more underſtood than the delicacy of the laſt. Tranſlation, therefore, muſt be frequently renewed, or all muſt periſh that depends upon the paſſing modes of life, or the varying uſe of words. Theſe changes muſt always be conſtant, and muſt always be quick, in a country where the chief intellectual buſineſs of every man is to read what is written in other languages. Such is the preſent ſtate of the Dutch, whoſe preſs is employed upon tranſlations from all the learned languages of the continent. Such was the ſtate of Rome, when Horace complained that thoſe who ſtudied Greek imitated nothing but the faults of their maſters. Such is the ſtate of every country, in proportion as it is ſubject to the influence of another. Such will be the ſtate of England, if thoſe who have the power, or the will, to encourage learning, ſhall ſuffer the preſent humour to prevail. Whether our language, which has been hitherto in a ſtate of continual improvement, will be hereafter depraved by change and refinement, or laſt long without alteration, cannot be known, becauſe it cannot be aſcertained when it is beſt. Poſſibly a few centuries may produce a uniformity of diction and purity of ſtyle, which no accident or affectation will be able to vitiate or obſcure; but if our preſent writers are more diligent than their predeceſſors, and leſs negligent of their own fame, if they conſider that a book may be laſting, by being uſeful, and endeavour to attain excellence, though they deſpair of perfection, our poſterity will perhaps have no cauſe to complain of the inſtability of our affairs. Whatever be the fate of our tongue, whether it ſhall in time loſe all reſemblance to that which is now ſpoken, and exiſt only in the pages of our writers, like the Roman Latin in thoſe of Livy and Tully, or whether it ſhall be wholly broken and diſſipated by the violence of barbarous conqueſt, or deluged and reformed by the influence of commerce, it muſt in either caſe become gradually leſs uſeful and leſs valuable. Nations, whoſe preſent ſtate no human proviſion can ſecure, muſt in time ſubmit to the deſtruction which deſtroys the laſting monuments of Greece and Rome. Europe muſt loſe the dominion of the ſea, and the poſſeſſors of diſtant regions will forget from what original ſtock they ſprung. Theſe conſiderations muſt, however, not diſcourage us; for though we muſt all periſh, our works may ſurvive us, and poſterity will not be wholly unwilling to preſerve thoſe memorials which we have raiſed. Let us therefore, while we are yet able, cultivate our language, and endeavour to tranſmit it to poſterity, as a work which, though not comparable to the laſting edifices of ſtone, may yet continue for many ages, if it be not violently overthrown, to be viſited by travellers, who will be able to diſcover in its preſent ſtate ſome remains of our predeceſſors, and to trace back the gradual changes of our cuſtoms and opinions.

In hope of giving longevity to that which its own nature forbids to be immortal, I have devoted many laborious years to the honour of my country, that we may no longer depend upon the nations round us for the authority of our language, and that the Engliſh ſcholar may be ſupplied with words and phraſes adapted to the preſent ſtate of things, and may not be obliged to learn the obſolete dialect of our anceſtors. Whether I have executed well or ill the taſk which I undertook, muſt be determined by thoſe who ſhall conſult my work in their turn. To aſcertain the merit of a performance of this kind, is the buſineſs of time. Every author muſt be expected to ſpeak well of his own intention; the world has always been diſpoſed to favour the diligence which endeavours to deſerve its favour, and a writer muſt conſider himſelf as diſabled from making a true eſtimate of his own labours, as the partial mother muſt be deprived of the power of diſtinguiſhing the features of her own child from the deformities that diſguiſe it to a ſtranger. Many of my hours have been paſſed in reading pages which only I ſhall ever read, and many in compariſons of meaning which perhaps no other reader will ever make. Yet I cannot but flatter myſelf that I have ſometimes looked with ſome degree of intelligence and attention on the moſt uſeful and the moſt elegant compoſitions, and that I have not often miſſed the meaning of a paſſage for want of conſidering it with ſufficient care. Senſible, however, that in ſo long a work many failures muſt eſcape, and that miſtakes muſt be diſcovered by thoſe who have more patience than myſelf, I muſt neceſſarily ſubmit to cenſure and to laughter, and muſt conſider the world as a great aſſembly, to which I have contributed entertainment or inſtruction, and which has a right to diſmiſs me with contempt, if I have not ſucceeded in my endeavour to pleaſe. Of the event of my preſent undertaking, I ſhall ſoon be informed by the common voice of mankind, which muſt ſoon determine whether I have done well or ill. Of the reſult of my labours, as far as they have been already examined by the public, I have not been much diſcouraged; for though I have ſometimes heard the ſound of cenſure, and perceived the ſmile of contempt, I have likewiſe obſerved that thoſe who could not deny my aſſertions to be juſt, were willing enough to allow them to be uſeful, and that thoſe who found me miſtaken in ſome inſtances, were not univerſally diſpoſed to inſult me as ignorant in all. Againſt thoſe who have thought me tedious, I muſt alſo defend myſelf; for I have always conſidered it as more eaſy to ſhorten than to lengthen, and have therefore choſen to ſet down rather what might poſſibly be omitted, than what muſt certainly be ſought elſewhere. Many paſſages which ſeemed to me to deſerve attention, I have extracted from books which few readers have in their hands, and which few have leiſure to peruſe with care; and I have often quoted paſſages of conſiderable length, becauſe thoſe who muſt conſult a great number of authors, are glad to ſhorten their labour by reſting part of their confidence on the faithfulness of a quotation. Theſe paſſages, when they ſtand in need of explanation, I have illuſtrated; when they are abſolute and independent, I have left them to ſtand their own teſtimony. Sometimes, when I find myſelf entangled in a ſentence, I have reſolved to eſcape by ſtriking into a new path; and ſometimes, when I could purſue the thread of conſtruction through all its involutions, I have not thought it neceſſary to diſentangle it, becauſe I conſidered that to be eaſy which was already underſtood. Leſt, however, I ſhould ſeem to have paſſed too ſlightly over paſſages of difficulty, I muſt obſerve, that I have endeavoured to ſmooth all the paths which I have trodden, and that I have ſeldom paſſed a ſentence which I have not laboured to underſtand. Many words and phraſes, uſeful and proper, I have ſometimes omitted, becauſe they were not found in thoſe authors which are conſidered as the models of purity; and many terms of art and ſcience muſt be ſuffered to ſtand unexplained, becauſe they muſt be underſtood before the book can be conſulted with any hope of inſtruction. Thoſe who are maſters of the ſubject will eaſily forgive the omiſſion, and thoſe who are not, muſt ſeek inſtruction elſewhere.

If, in forming the plan of my work, I have ſometimes indulged a hope unattainable in the preſent ſtate of our knowledge, and exacted from myſelf and others more than could be performed, I muſt be conſidered as having done what muſt be done by every man who undertakes to write upon a ſubject not yet exhauſted; for of thoſe whom the world has juſtly called learned, the greater part have left their labours imperfect, becauſe they endeavoured to do more than enough. Thus Scaliger intended a univerſal comment on the claſſicks, and Caſaubon propoſed to write a hiſtory of learning from the reſtoration of letters. Theſe deſigns, which their authors muſt have known to be too large for the life of man, were not haſtily undertaken, but the firſt was the labour of thirty years, and the ſecond of ſixteen, and both were laid aſide, becauſe the tediouſneſs of enquiry, and the uncertainty of intelligence, protracted the proſpect of the end, and left them no longer the power or the deſire of purſuing it. Thus Boſſu, a profeſſed critick, who undertook to explain the Epick Poem, was forced to ſtop in the firſt book, becauſe he could not diſcover whether the hero or the poet was to be conſidered as the principal agent. Thus Burman, who undertook a commentary on Ovid, was obliged to difmiſs the firſt book imperfect, becauſe he could not find whether the poet's baniſhment was to Tomi or Tibur. Theſe inſtances may ſhow how eaſily the moſt diligent and learned man may be diſcouraged, and how much eaſier it is to deſpair than to proceed. Of the uncertainty of my own performance I have had many painful proofs, and muſt have many more before the end of the preſs. Many words paſſed in review before me, which I could not tell whether to admit or reject, becauſe I could not diſcover whether they were eſtabliſhed or caſual. Many terms, uſeful and proper, have eſcaped me, becauſe I did not know that they were uſed in my preſence. Many paſſages, which I paſſed over as unworthy of notice, have been ſelected by others as examples of elegance. Many things, which I conſidered as certain, have been queſtioned, and I muſt therefore ſuppoſe that many more have eſcaped my obſervation.

Of the Engliſh Dictionary, when it ſhall be found that much is omitted, let it not be forgotten that much likewiſe is performed, and though no book was ever ſuffered to periſh more juſtly than a dictionary, which, as ſoon as it is printed, is always deficient, yet, without a dictionary the ſtability of our language muſt always be imperfect. Though every word cannot be regiſtered, ſome muſt be ſuffered to eſcape, and new words muſt always ariſe to ſupply thoſe which uſe ſhall have worn away, yet the evil will be leſs frequent in proportion as the vocabulary is more complete; and whatever faults may be found in the preſent performance, it muſt be remembered, that without it they muſt have been multiplied beyond the reach of human diligence, and that thoſe faults muſt have been committed by every man who undertook the work, by whom they muſt have been ſupplied, and by whom they muſt have been cenſured. Many terms muſt have been paſſed over, which the preſent generation will not eaſily believe ever to have been queſtioned, but which poſterity, when uſe ſhall have eſtabliſhed them, will receive without heſitation, and perhaps wonder how they eſcaped the firſt collectors of our words. Many paſſages muſt have eſcaped explanation, which, when the progreſs of knowledge ſhall have left them behind it, will be underſtood without a gloſſary. Many minute diſtinctions muſt have paſſed unobſerved, which the exactneſs of poſterity will obſerve, and many rules muſt be inſufficiently drawn from paucity of examples, which will be underſtood hereafter with all the preciſion of axioms. Thoſe who ſhall conſider theſe difficulties, will eaſily diſcover why the Engliſh Academicians, did not ſecure them from the cenſure of Bentley; if the embodied critick of France, when he paſſed into another form, may ſurely be contented without the praiſe of perfection, which, if I could obtain, in this gloom of ſolitude, what would it avail me? I have protracted my work till moſt of thoſe whom I wiſhed to pleaſe, have ſunk into the grave, and ſucceſs and miſcarriage are empty ſounds. I therefore diſmiſs it with frigid tranquillity, having little to fear or hope from cenſure or from praiſe.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

THOUGH the Britains or Welſh were the firſt poſſeſſors of this iſland, whoſe names are recorded, and are therefore in civil hiſtory always conſidered as the predeceſſors of the preſent inhabitants; yet the deduction of the Engliſh language, from the earlieſt times of which we have any knowledge to its preſent ſtate, requires no mention of them for we have ſo few words, which can, with any probability, be refered to Britiſh roots, that we juſtly regard the Saxons and Welſh, as nations totally diſtinct. It has been conjectured, that when the Saxons ſeized this country, they ſuffered the Britains to live among them in a ſtate of vaſſalage, employed in the culture of the ground, and other laborious and ignoble ſervices. But it is ſcarcely poſſible, that a nation, however depreſſed, ſhould have been mixed in conſiderable numbers with the Saxons without ſome communication of their tongue, and therefore it may, with great reaſon, be imagined, that thoſe, who were not ſheltered in the mountains, periſhed by the ſword

The whole fabrick and ſcheme of the Engliſh language is Gothick or Teutonick: it is a dialect of that tongue, which prevails over all the northern countries of Europe, except thoſe where the Sclavonian is ſpoken. Of theſe languages Dr. Hickes has thus exhibited the genealogy.

Of the Gothick, the only monument remaining is a copy of the goſpels ſomewhat mutilated, which, from the ſilver with which the characters are adorned, is called the ſilver book. It is now preſerved at Upſal, and has been twice publiſhed. Whether the diction of this venerable manuſcript be purely Gothick, has been doubted; it ſeems however to exhibit the moſt ancient dialect now to be found of the Teutonick race, and the Saxon, which is the original of the preſent Engliſh, was either derived from it, or both deſcended from ſome common parent.

What was the form of the Saxon language, when, about the year 450, they firſt entred Britain, cannot now be known They ſeem to have been a people without learning, and very probably without an alphabet; their ſpeech therefore, having been always cursory and extemporaneous, muſt have been artleſs and unconnected, without any modes of tranſition or involution of clauſes; which abruptneſs and inconnection may be obſerved even in their later writings. This barbarity may be ſuppoſed to have continued during their wars with the Britains, which for a time left them no leiſure for ſofter ſtudies; nor is there any reaſon for ſuppoſing it abated, till the year 570, when Auguſtine came from Rome to convert them to Chriſtianity. The Chriſtian religion always implies or produces a certain degree of civility and learning, they then became by degrees acquainted with the Roman language, and ſo gained, from time to time, ſome knowledge and elegance, till in three centuries they had formed a language capable of expreſſing all the ſentiments of a civiliſed people, as appears by king Alfred's paraphraſe or imitation of Boethius, and his ſhort preface, which I have ſelected as the firſt ſpecimen of ancient Engliſh.

This may perhaps be conſidered as a ſpecimen of the Saxon in its higheſt ſtate of purity, for here are ſcarcely any words borrowed from the Roman dialects.

Of the following verſon of the goſpels the age is not certainly known, but it was probably written between the time of Alfred and that of the Norman conqueſt, and therefore may properly be inſerted here.

Tranſlations ſeldom afford juſt ſpecimens of a language, and leaſt of all thoſe in which a ſcrupulous and verbal interpretation is endeavoured, becauſe they retain the phraſeology and ſtructure of the original tongue; yet they have often this convenience, that the ſame book, being tranſlated in different ages, affords opportunity of marking the gradations of change, and bringing one age into compariſon with another. For this purpoſe I have placed the Saxon verſion and that of Wickliffe, written about the year 1380, in oppoſite columns; becauſe the convenience of eaſy collation ſeems greater than that of regular chronology.

LUK, CHAP. I.

IN the dayes of Eroude kyng of Judee ther was a preſt Zacarye by name: of the ſort of Abia, and his wyf was of the doughtris of Aaron: and hir name was Elizabeth.

2 An bothe weren juſte bifore God: goynge in alle the maundements and juſtifyngis of the Lord with-outen playnt.

3 And thei hadden no child, for Elizabeth was bareyn and bothe weren of greet age in her dayes.

4 And it bifel that whanne Zacarye ſchould do the office of preſthod in the ordir of his courſe to fore God.

5 Aftir the cuſtom of the preſthod, he wente forth by lot and entride into the temple to encenſen.

6 And at the multitude of the puple was without forth and preyede in the our of encenſying.

7 And an aungel of the Lord apperide to him, and ſtood on the right half of the auter of encenſe

8 And Zacarye ſeynge was afrayed: and drede fel upon him.

9 And the aungel ſayde to him, Zacarye drede thou not. for thy preier is herd, and Elizabeth thi wif ſchal bere to thee a ſone: and his name ſchal be clepid Jon.

10 And joye and gladyng ſchal be to thee: and manye ſchulen have joye in his natyvyte

11 For he ſchal be great bifore the Lord and he ſchal not drinke wyn ne ſydyr, and he ſchal be fulfild with the holy goſt yit of his modir wombe

12 And he ſchal converte manye of the children of Israel to her Lord God

13 And he ſchal go bifore in the ſpiryte and vertu of [illegible] and he ſchal turne the hertis of the fadris to the ſonis, and men out of beleeve: to the prudence of juſt men, to make redy a perfyt puple to the Lord

46 Da cwæð Maria. Min sawel mærsað Drihten.

14 And Zacarye seyde to the aungel: wherof schal Y wyte this? for Y am old: and my wyf hath gon ter in hir dayes.

15 And the aungel answerde and seyde to him, for Y am Gabriel that stonde nygh bifore God, and Y am sent to thee to speke and to evangelise to thee these thingis, and lo thou schalt be doumbe.

16 And thou schalt not mowe speke, til into the day in which these thingis schulen be don. for thou hast not beleved to my wordis, whiche schulen be fulfild in her tyme.

17 And the puple was abidynge Zacarye: and thei wondriden that he taryede in the tempie

18 And he gede out and myghte not speke to hem. and thei knewen that he hadde seyn a visioun in the tempie, and he bekende to hem: and he dwelide stille doumbe.

19 And it was don whanne the dayes of his office weren fulfild: he wente into his hous.

20 And after these dayes Elizabeth his wif conseyvede and hidde hir fyve monethis and seyde.

21 For so the Lord dide to me in the dayes in whiche he biheld to take awey my reprof among men.

22 But in the sixte monethe the aungel Gabriel was sent from God; into a cytee of Galilee whos name was Nazareth

23 To a maydun weddid to a man: whos name was Joseph of the hous of Dauith, and the name of the maydun was Marye.

24 And the aungel entride to hir, and seyde, hel ful of grace the Lord be with thee: blessid be thou among wymmen.

25 And whanne sche hadde herd: sche was troublid in his word, and thoughte what manner salutacioun this was.

26 And the aungel seid to hir, ne drede not thou Marye: for thou hast founden grace anentis God.

27 Lo thou schalt conseyve in woumbe, and schalt bere a sone: and thou schalt clepe his name Jhesus.

28 This shall be gret: and he schal be clepid the sone of highestte, and the Lord God schal geve to him the seete of Dauith his fadir

29 And he schal regne in the hous of Jacob withouten ende, and of his rewme schal be noon ende.

30 And Marye seyde to the aungel, on what maner schal this thing be don? for Y knowe not man

31 And the aungel answerde and seyde to hir, the holy Gost schal come fro above into thee: and the vertu of the highestte scha. ouer schadowe thee: and therfore that holy thing that schal be boran of thee: scha. be clepide the sone of God

32 And lo Elizabeth thi cosyn, and sche also hath conseyved a sone in hir eelde, and this monethe is the sixte to hir that is clepid bareyn

33 For every word schal not be impossyble anentis God.

34 And Marye seide to the hond maydun of the Lord: be it doon to me after thi word; and the aungel departide fro hir

35 And Marye roos up in tho dayes and wente with haste into the mountaynes into a citee of Judee.

36 And sche entride into the hous of Zacarye and grette Elizabeth

37 And it was don as Elizabeth herde the salutacioun of Marye the young childe in hir wombe gladide, and Elizabeth was fulfild with the holy Gost.

38 And cryede with a gret voice and seyde, blessid be thou among wymmen and blessid be the fruyt of thy wombe.

39 And wherof is this thing to me, that the modir of my Lord come to me?

40 For lo as the vois of thi salutacioun was maad in myn eris: the yong child gladide in joye in my woumbe.

41 And blessid be thou that hast beleeved: for thilke thingis that ben seid of the Lord to thee schulen be partytly don.

Of the Saxon poetry ſome ſpecimen is neceſſary, though our ignorance of the laws of their metre and the quantities of their ſyllables, which it would be very difficult, perhaps impoſſible, to recover, excludes us from that pleaſure which the old bards undoubtedly gave to their contemporaries.

The firſt poetry of the Saxons was without rhyme, and conſequently muſt have depended upon the quantity of their ſyllables; but they began in time to imitate their neighbours, and cloſe their verſes with correſpondent ſounds

The two paſſages, which I have ſelected, contain apparently the rudiments of our preſent lyrick meaſures, and the writers may be juſtly conſidered as the genuine anceſtors of the Engliſh poets.

About the year 1150, the Saxon began to take a form in which the beginning of the preſent Engliſh may be plainly diſcovered, this change ſeems not to have been the effect of the Norman conqueſt, for very few French words are found to have been introduced in the firſt hundred years after it, the language muſt therefore have been altered by cauſes like thoſe which, notwithſtanding the care of writers and ſocieties inſtituted to obviate them, are even now daily making innovations in every living language. I have exhibited a ſpecimen of the language of this age from the year 1135 to 1140 of the Saxon chronicle, of which the latter part was apparently written near the time to which it relates

Nearly about this time, the following pieces of poetry ſeem to have been written, of which I have inſerted only ſhort fragments; the firſt is a rude attempt at the preſent meaſure of eight ſyllables, and the ſecond is a natural introduction to Robert of Glouceſter, being compoſed in the ſame meaſure, which, however rude and barbarous it may ſeem, taught the way to the Alexandrines of the French poetry.

In theſe fragments, the adulteration of the Saxon tongue, by a mixture of the Norman, becomes apparent; yet it is not ſo much changed by the admixture of new words, which might be imputed to commerce with the continent, as by changes of its own forms and terminations, for which no reaſon can be given.

Hitherto the language uſed in this iſland, however different in ſucceſſive time, may be called Saxon; nor can it be expected, from the nature of things gradually changing, that any time can be aſſigned, when the Saxon may be ſaid to ceaſe, and the Engliſh to commence. Robert of Glouceſter however, who is placed by the critics in the thirteenth century, ſeems to have uſed a kind of intermediate diction, neither Saxon nor Engliſh, in his work therefore we ſee the tranſition exhibited, and, as he is the firſt of our writers in rhyme, of whom any large work remains, a more extenſive quotation is extracted. He writes apparently in the ſame meaſure with the foregoing author of St. Margarite, which poliſhed into greater exactneſs, appeared to our anceſtors ſo ſuitable to the genius of the Engliſh language, that it was continued in uſe almoſt to the middle of the ſeventeenth century

At Syreboutne he was ybured, & ys broþer Adelbryzt
His kynedom adde after hym, as lawe was and ryzt.
By ys daye þe verde com of þe heþene men wel prout,
And Hamteſſyre and deſtrude Wyncheſtre al out
And þat lond folc of Hamteſſyre her red þo nome
And of Barcſſyre, and fozte and þe ſſrewen ouercome.
Adelbryzt was kyng of Kent zeres folle tene,
And of Weſtſex bote vyue, þo he deyde ych wene.

ADELRED was after hym kyng y mad in þe place,
Eyzte hondred & ſeuene & ſyxty as in þe zer of grace.
þe vorſte zer of ys kynedom þe Deneys þycke com,
And robbede and deſtrude, and cytes vaſte nome.
Mayſtres hi adde of her oſt, as yt were dukes, tueye,
Hynguar and Hubba, þat ſſrewen were boye
In Eſt Angle hi byleuede, to reſt hem as yt were,
Myd her oſt at þe wynter, of þe vorſt zere.
þe oþer zer hi dude hem vorþ, & ouer Homber come,
And flowe to grounde & barnde, & Euerwyk nome.
þer was batayle ſtrong y nou, vor yſlawe was þere Oſryc kyng of Homberlond, & monye þat with hym were þo Homberlond was þus yſſend, hi wende & tounes

[illegible] batayles her after in þe ſuf zere
Hi ſmyte, and at bope þe heþene mayſtres were.

g Adelred ſone þo þen wey of dey nome,
As yt wel[illegible]yty zer of ys kynedom
Ar Wymbou[illegible]e was ybured, as God zef þat cas, þe gode Al[illegible], ys broþer, after hym kyng was.

ALFRED, þys noble man, as in þe zer of grace nc nom
honored & ſyxty & tuelue þe kynedom
Art he adde at Rome ybe, &, vor ys grete wyſdom, þe pope Leon hym a-ſſede, þo he þuder com,
And þe kynge's croune of hys hond, þat in þys lond
Zut ys
And he ed hym to be kyng, ar he kyng were ywys.
An he was kyng ot Engelond, of al e þat þer come,
þat vorſt þus ylad was of þe pope of Rome,
An ſuþþe oþer after hym of þe erchebyſſopes echon.
So þat hyuor hym pore kyng nas þer non
In þe Souþ ſyde of Temeſe nyne batayles he nome
Azen þe Deneys þe vorſt zer of ys kynedom.
[illegible]ye zer he was þus in þys lond in batayle & in wo,
An ofte ſyþe abou-e was, and byne þe ofter mo;
So ponge, þat hym nere by leaede bote þre ſlyren in ys
[illegible]
Hamteſſyre, and Wylteſſyre, and Somerſete, of al ys lond.
A day as he wery was, and aſuoddrynge hym nome
And ys men were ywend auyſſeþ, Seyn Cutbert to hym

"þat þe more azen þe kunde of vyſſynge yt ys.
"Of ſerue yt wel azen God, and ylef me ys meſſager,
"And þou ſſall þy wylle abyde, as ycham ytold her."
As þys kyng herof awoc, and of þys ſyzte þozte,
Hys vyſſares come to hym, & ſo gret won of ſyſs hym
orozte,
þat wonder yt was, & namelyche vor þe weder was ſo
colde.
þo lyuede þe god man wel, þat Seyn Cutbert adde ytold.
In Deuenyſſyre þer after aryuede of Deneys þre and tuenty ſſypuol men, all azen þe peys, þe kynge's broþer of Denemarch duc of oſt was
Oure kynge's men of Engelond mette hem by cas,
And ſmyte þer an batay e, and her gret duc ſlowe,
And eyzte hondred & fourty men, & her caronyes to drowe.
þo kyng Alfred hurde þys, ys herte gladede þo, þat lond folc to hym come ſo þycke ſo yt m[illegible]te be,
Of Somerſete, of Wylteſſyre, of Hamteſſy[illegible]re alſo,
Euere as he wende, and of ys owe folc al ſo.
So þat he adde poer ynou, and atte laſte hi come,
And a batayle at Edendone azen þe Deneys nome,
And flowe to grounde, & wonne þe may tre of the velde.
þe kyng & ys grete duke bygonne hem to zelde
To þe kyng Alfred to ys wylle, and oſtages toke,
Vorto wende out of ys lond, zyf he yt wolde loke;
And zut herto, vor ys loue, to auonge Criſtendom,
Kyng Gormund, þe hexte kyng, vorſt þer to come.
Kyng Alfred ys godfader was, & ybaptyſed ek þer were þretty of her hexte dukes, and muche of þat folc þere Kyng Alfred hem huld wyþ hym tuelf dawes as he hende,
And ſuþþe he zef hem large zyftes, and et h[illegible] wende.
Hi-, þat nolde Criſtyn be, of lande flowe!
And by zonde ſee in France dude wel muche wo
[illegible] þe ſſrewen come azen, and muche wo here wrozte.
[illegible] þe kyng Alfred atte laſte to ſlame hem euere brozte

Kyng Alfred was þe wyſoſt kyng, þat long was byjore.
Vor þey me ſegge þe lawes beþ in worre tyme vorlore,
Nas yt noȝt ſo his daye. vor þey he in worre were,
Lawes he made ryȝtuolkore, and ſtrengore þan er w re.
Clerc he was god ynou, and ȝut, as me telleþ me,
He was more þan ten ȝer old, ar he couþe ys abece.
Ac ys gode moder ofte ſmale ȝyftes hym tok,
Vor to byleje oþer ple, and loky on ys boke.
So þat bý por clergye ys ryȝt lawes he wonde,
þat neuere er nere y mad, to gouerný ys lond.
And vor þe worre was ſo muche of þe laſer Deneys, þe men of þys ſa ue lond were of þe worſe peys.
And robbede and ſlowe oþere, þeruor ne býuonde,
þat þer were hondredes in eche contreye of ys lond.
And in ech toune of þe hondred a teþynge were alſo,
And þat ech man wyþoute gret lond in teþynge were ydo,
And þat ech man knewe oþer þat in teþynge were,
And waſte ſonde of her ſtat, ȝyf me þu vp hem bere.
So ſtreyt he was, þat þey me ledde amydde weyes heye
Seluer, þat non man ne dorſte yt nyme, þey he yt ſeye.
Abbeys he rerde mony on, and mony ſtodes ywys.
Ac Wyncheſtrye he verde on, þat nywe munſtre ycluped ys.
Hys lyf eyȝte and twenty ȝer in ys kynedom ylaſte.
After ys deþ he was ybured at Wyncheſtre atte laſte.

Sir John Maundeville wrote, as he himſelf informs us, in the fourteenth century, and his work, which comprising a relation of many different particulars, conſequently required the uſe of many words and phraſes, may be properly ſpecified in this place. Of the following quotations, I have choſen the firſt, becauſe it ſhows, in ſome meaſure, the ſtate of European ſcience as well as of the Engliſh tongue; and the ſecond, becauſe it is valuable for the force of thought and beauty of expreſſion.

IN that lond, ne in many othere bezonde that, no man may ſee the ſterre tranſmontane, that is clept the ſterre of the ſee, that is unmevable, and that is toward the Northe, that we clepen the lode ſterre. But men ſeen another ſterre, the contrarie to him, that is toward the Southe, that is clept Antartyk. And right as the ſchip men taken here avys here, and governe hem be the lode ſterre, right ſo don ſchip men bezonde the parties, be the ſterre of the Southe, the which ſterre appereth not to us. And this ſterre, that is toward the Northe, that wee clepen the lode ſterre, ne apperethe not to hem. For whiche cauſe, men may wel perceyve, that the lond and the ſee ben of rownde ſchapp and forme. For the partie of the firmament ſchewethe in o contree, that ſchewethe not in another contree. And men may well preven be experience and ſotyle compaſſement of wytt, that zif a man fond paſſages of ſchippes, that wolde go to ſerchen the world, men myghte go be ſchippe alle aboute the world, and abouen and benethen. The whiche thing I prove thus, after that I have ſeyn. For I have been toward the parties of Braban, and beholden the Aſtrolabre, that the ſterre that is clept the tranſmontayne, is 53 degrees highe. And more forthere in Almayne and Bewme, it hathe 58 degrees. And more forthe toward the parties ſeptemtrionales, it is 62 degrees of heghte, and certyn mynutes. For I my ſelf have meſured it by the Aſtrolabre. Now ſchulle ze knowe, that azen the Tranſmontayne, is the tother ſterre, that is clept Antartyke; as I have ſeyd before. And tho 2 ſterres ne meeven nevere. And be hem turnethe alle the firmament, right as dothe a wheel, that turnethe be his axille tree: ſo that tho ſterres beren the firmament in 2 egalle parties; ſo that it hathe als mochel abouen, as it hathe benethen. After this, I have gon toward the parties meridionales, that is toward the Southe: and I have founden, that in Lybye, men ſeen firſt the ſterre Antartyk. And ſo fer I have gon more in tho contrees, that I have founde that ſterre more highe; ſo that toward the highe Lybye, it is 18 degrees of heghte, and certeyn minutes (of the whiche, 60 minutes maken a degree) after goynge be ſee and bezonde, toward this contree, of that I have ſpoke, and to other yles and londes bezonde that contree, I have founden the ſterre Antartyk of 33 degrees of heghte, and mo mynutes. And zif I hadde had companye and ſchippynge, for to go more bezonde, I trowe wel in certyn, that wee ſchulde have ſeen alle the roundneſſe of the firmament alle abou e. For as I have ſeyd zou be forn, the half of the firmament is betwene tho 2 ſterres: the whiche halfondelle I have ſeyn. And of the tother halfondelle, I have ſeyn toward the Northe, undre the Tranſmontane 62 degrees and 10 mynute, and toward the partie meridionalle, I have ſeen undre the Antartyk 33 degrees and 16 mynutes. and thanne the halfondelle of the firmament in alle, ne holdethe not but 180 degrees. And of tho 180, I have ſeen 62 on that o part, and 33 on that other part, that ben 95 degrees, and nyghne the halfondelle of a degree; and ſo there ne faylethe but that I have ſeen alle the firmament, ſaf 84 degrees and the halfondelle of a degree; and that is not the fourthe part of the firmament. For the 4 partie of the roundneſſe of the firmament holt 90 degrees: ſo there fayletthe but 5 degrees and an half, of the fourthe partie. And alſo I have ſeen the 3 parties of alle the roundneſſe of the firmament, and more zit 5 degrees and an half. Be the whiche I ſeye zou certeynly, that men may envirowne alle the erthe of alle the world, as wel undre as aboven, and turnen azen to his contree, that hadde compaynye and ſchippynge and condayt: and alle weyes he ſchulde fynde men, londes, and yles, als wel as in this contree. For zee wyten wel e, that thei that ben toward the Antartyk, thei ben ſtreghte, feet azen feet of hem, that dwellen undre the tranſmontane, als wel as wee and thei that dwellyn under us, ben feet azenſt feet. For alle the parties of ſee and of lond han here appoſitees, habitables or trepaſſaoes, and thei of this half and bezond half. And wytethe wel, that after that, that I may parceyve and comprehende, the londes of Preſtre John, emperour of Ynde ben undre us. For in goynge from Scotlond or from Englond toward Jeruſalem, men gon upward alweys. For oure lond is in the lowe partie of the erthe, toward the Weſt: and the lond of Preſtre John is the lowe partie of the erthe, toward the Eſt: and thei han there the day, whan wee have the nyghte, and alſo highe to the contrarie, thei han the nyghte, whan wee han the day. For the erthe and the ſee ben of round forme and ſchapp, as I have ſeyd beforn. And that that men gon upward to o coſt, men gon doonward to another coſt. Alſo zee have herd me ſeye, that Jeruſalem is in the myddes of the world; and that may men preven and ſchewen thiere, be a ſpere, that is pyghte in to the erthe, upon the hour of mydday, whan it is equenoxium, that ſchewethe no ſchadwe on no ſyde. And that it ſcholde ben in the myddes of the world, David wytneſſethe it in the Pſautre, where he ſeythe, Deus operatus eſt ſalutē in medio terre. Thanne thei that parten fro the parties of the Weſt, for to go toward Jeruſalem, als many iorneyes as thei gon upward for to go thidre, in als many iorneyes may thei gon fro Jeruſalem, unto other contynyes of the ſuperficialte of the erthe bezonde. And whan men gon bezonde tho iourneyes, towarde Ynde and to the foreyn yles, alle is envyronynge the roundneſſe of the erthe and of the ſee, undre oure contrees on this half. And therfore hathe it befallen many tymes of o thing, that I have herd cownted, whan I was zong; how a worthi man departed ſometyme from oure contrees, for to go ſerche the world. And ſo he paſſed Ynde, and the yles bezonde Ynde, where ben mo than 5000 yles: and ſo longe he wente be ſee and lond, and ſo envirouned the world be many ſeyſons, that he fond an yle, where he herde ſpeke his owne langage, calynge on oxen in the plowghe, ſuche wordes as men ſpeken to beſtes in his owne contree, whereof he hadde gret merveyle: for he knewe not how it myghte be. But I ſeye, that he had gon ſo longe, be londe and be ſee, that he had envyround alle the erthe, that he was comen azen envirounynge, that is to ſeye, goynge aboute, unto his owne marches, zif he wolde have paſſed forthe, til he had founden his contree and his owne knouleche. But he turned azen from thens, from whens he was come fro; and ſo he loſte moche peynefulle labour, as him ſelf ſeyde, a gret while after, that he was comen hom. For it befelle after, that he wente in to Norweye; and there tempeſt of the ſee toke him; and he arryved in an yle; and whan he was in that yle, he knew wel, that it was the yle, where he had herd speke his owne langage before, and the callynge of the oxen at the plowghe: and that was possible thinge. But how it semethe to symple men unlerned, that men ne mowe not go undre the erthe, and also that men schulde falle toward the hevene, from undre! But that may not be, upon lesse, than wee mowe falle toward hevene, fro the erthe, where wee ben. For fro what parte of the erthe, that men duelle, outher aboven or benethen, it semethe alweyes to hem that duellen, that thei gon more righte than ony other folk. And righte as it semethe to us, that thei ben undre us, righte so it semethe hem, that wee ben undre hem. For zif a man myghte falle fro the erthe unto the firmament; be grettere resoun, the erthe and the see, that ben so grete and so hevy, scholde fallen to the firmament: but that may not be: and therfore seithe oure Lord God, Non ? meas me, qui suspendi terra ex nichilo? And alle be it, that it be possible thing, that men may so envyronne alle the world, natheles of a 1000 persones, on ne myghte not happen to returnen in to his contree. For, for the gretnesse of the erthe and of the see, men may go be a 1000 and a 1000 other weyes, that no man cowde redye hem perfitely toward the parties that he cam fro, but zif it were be aventure and happ, or be the grace of God. For the erthe is fulle large and fulle gret, and holt in roundnesse and aboute envyroun, be aboven and be benethen 20425 myles, after the opynyoun of the olde wise astronomeres. And here seyenges I repreve nought. But after my lytyle wyt, it semethe me, savynge here reverence, that it is more. And for to have bettere understondynge, I seye thus, be ther ymagyned a figure, that hathe a gret compas; and aboute the poynt of the gret compas, that is clept the centre, be made another little compas than afore, be the gret compas devised be lines in manye parties; and that alle the lynes meeten at the centre; so that in as many parties, as the grete compas schal be departed, in als manye, schalle be departed the litille, that is aboute the centre, alle be it, that the spaces ben lesse. Now thanne, be the gret compas represented for the firmament, and the litille compas represented for the erthe. Now thanne the firmament is devysed, be astronomeres, in 12 signes; and every signe is devysed in 30 degrees, that is 360 degrees, that the firmament hathe aboven. Also, be the erthe devysed in als many parties, as the firmament, and lat every partye answere to a degree of the firmament: and wytethe it wel, that after the auctoures of astronomye, 700 furlonges of erthe answeren to a degree of the firmament; and tho ben 87 miles and 4 furlonges. Now be that here multiplyed be 360 sithes; and than thei ben 31500 myles, every of 8 furlonges, after myles of oure contree. So moche hathe the erthe in roundnesse, and of heghte environ, after myn opynyoun and myn understondynge. And zee schalle understonde, that after the opynyoun of olde wise philosophres and astronomeres, oure contree ne Irelond ne Wales ne Scotlond ne Norweye ne the other yles costynge to hem, ne ben not in the superficyalte counted aboven the erthe; as it schewethe be alle the bokes of astronomye. For the superficialtee of the erthe is departed in 7 parties, for the 7 planetes: and tho parties ben clept clymates. And oure parties be not of the 7 clymates: for thei ben descendynge toward the West. And also these yles of Ynde, which beth evene azenst us, beth noght reckned in the climates: for thei ben azenst us, that ben in the lowe contree. And the 7 clymates strecchen hem envyronynge the world.

II. And I John Maundevylle knyghte aboveseyd, (alle thoughe I be unworthi) that departed from oure contrees and passed the see, the zeer of grace 1322. that have passed manye londes and manye yles and contrees, and cerched manye fulle straunge places, and have ben in many a fulle gode honourable companye, and at many a faire dede of armes, (alle be it that I dide none myself, for myn unable insufficiance) now I am comen hom (mawgree my self) to reste: for gowtes, artetykes, that me distreynen, tho diffynen the ende of my labour, azenst my wille (God knowethe.) And thus takynge solace in my wrecched reste, recordynge the tyme passed, I have fulfilled these thinges and putte hem wryten in this boke, as it wolde come in to my mynde, the zeer of grace 1356 in the 34 zeer that I departede from oure contrees. Wherfore I preye to alle the rederes and hereres of this boke, zif it plese hem, that thei wolde preyen to God for me: and I schalle preye for hem. And alle tho that seyn for me a Pater noster, with an Ave Maria, that God forzeve me my synnes, I make hem partneres and graunte hem part of alle the gode pilgrymages and of alle the gode dedes, that I have don, zif ony be to his plesance: and noghte ony of tho, but of alle that evere I schalle do unto my lyves ende. And I beseche Almyghty God, fro whom alle godenesse and grace comethe fro, that he voucheſaf, of his excellent mercy and habundant grace, to fulle fylle hire soules with inspiracioun of the Holy Goste, in makynge defence of alle hire goostly enemyes here in erthe, to hire savacioun, bothe of body and soule; to worschipe and thankynge of him, that is three and on, with outen begynnynge and without endynge; that is, with outen qualitee, good, and with outen quantytee, gret, that in alle places is present, and alle thinges contenynynge; the whiche that no goodnesse may amende, ne non evelle empeyre; that in perfeyte trynytee lyvethe and regnethe God, be alle wordes and be alle tymes. Amen, Amen, Amen.

The first of our authours, who can be properly said to have written English, was Sir John Gower, who, in his Confession of a Lover, calls Chaucer his disciple, and may therefore be considered as the father of our poetry.

NOWE for to speke of the commune,
It is to drede of that fortune,
Which hath befalle in sondrye londes:
But ofte for defaute of bondes
All sodeinly, er it be wist,
A tunne, whan his he arist
Tobreketh, and renneth all aboute,
Whiche els shulde noght gone out.
And eke full ofte a litell skare
Vpon a banke, er men be ware,
Let in the streme, whiche with gret peine,
If any man it shall restreine.
Where lawe faileth, errour groweth,
He is not wise, who that ne troweth.
For it hath proued ofter this.
And thus the common clamour is
In euery londe, where people dwelleth:
And eche in his complainte telleth,
How that the worlde is miswent,
And thervpon his argument
Yeueth euery man in sondrie wise:
But what man wolde him self auise
His conscience, and noght misuse,
He make wel at the first excuse
His god, whiche euer stant in one,
In him there is defaute none
So must it stande vpon vs selue,
Nought only vpon ten ne twelue,
But plenarly vpon vs all.
For man is cause of that shall fall.

The history of our language is now brought to the point at which the history of our poetry is generally supposed to commence, the time of the illustrious Geoffry Chaucer, who may perhaps, with great justice, be stiled the first of our versifyers who wrote poetically. He does not however appear to have deserved all the praise which he has received, or all the censure that he has suffered. Dryden, who mistakes genius for learning, and, in confidence of his abilities, ventured to write of what he had not examined, ascribes to Chaucer the first refinement of our numbers, the first production of easy and natural rhymes, and the improvement of our language, by words borrowed from the more polished languages of the continent. Skinner contrarily blames him in harsh terms for having vitiated his native speech by whole cartloads of foreign words. But he that reads the works of Gower will find smooth numbers and easy rhymes, of which Chaucer is supposed to have been the inventor, and the French words, whether good or bad, of which Chaucer is charged as the importer. Some innovations he might probably make, like others, in the infancy of our poetry, which the paucity of books does allow us to discover with particular exactneſs; but the works of Gower and Lydgate ſufficiently evince, that his diction was in general like that of his contemporaries: and ſome improvements he undoubtedly made by the various diſpoſitions of his rhymes, and by the mixture of different numbers, in which he ſeems to have been happy and judicious. I have ſelected ſeveral ſpecimens both of his proſe and verſe; and among them, part of his tranſlation of Boetius, to which another verſion, made in the time of queen Mary, is oppoſed. It would be improper to quote very ſparingly an author of ſo much reputation, or to make very large extracts from a book ſo generally known.

CHAUCER

ALAS! I wepyng am conſtrained to begin verſe of ſorowfull matter, that whilom in floriſhyng ſtudie made delitable ditees. For lo! rendyng muſes of Poetes endyten to me thinges to be writen, and drerie teres. At laſte no drede ne might overtake tho muſes, that trete me werren felowes, and foloweden my waie, that is to ſaie, when I was exiled, thei that weren of my youth whilom welfull and grene, comforten now forowfull werdes of me olde man: for elde is comen unwarely upon me, haſted by the harmes that I have, and ſorowe hath commaunded his age to be in me. Heres hore aren ſhad overtime liche upon my hed; and the ſlacke ſkinne trembleth of mine empted bodie. Thilke deth of men is welcfull, that he ne cometh not in yeres that be ſwete, but cometh to wretches often icleped: Alas, alas with how defe an ere deth cruel turneth awaie fro wretches, and naieth for to cloſe wepyng eyen. While fortune unfaithfull favoured me with light godes, that ſorowfull houre, that is to ſaie, the deth, had almoſte drente myne hedde: but now for fortune cloudie hath chaunged her decevable chere to mewarde, myne unpitous life draweth along ungreable dwelynges. O ye my frendes, what, or whereto avaunted ye me to ben welfull? For he that hath fallin, ſtode in no ſtedfaſt degre.

IN the mene while, that I ſtill record theſe thynges with my ſelf, and marked my wepelie complainte with office of poincteil: I ſaugh ſtondyng aboven the light of myn hed a woman of full grete reverence, by ſemblaunt. Her eyen brennyng, and clere, ſeyng over the common might of menne, with a lively colour, and with ſoche vigour and ſtrength that it ne might not be nempned, al were it ſo, that ſhe were full of ſo grete age, that menne wouldden not trowen in no manere, that ſhe were of our elde.

The ſtature of her was of doutous Judgemente, for ſometyme ſhe conſtrained and ſtronke her ſelfen, lyke to the common meſure of menne: And ſometyme it ſemed, that ſhe touched the heven with the light of her hedde. And when ſhe hove her hedde higher, ſhe perced the ſelf heven, ſo that the ſight of menne lokyng was in ydell: her clothes wer maked of right delie thredes, and ſubtel craft of perdurable matter. The whiche clothes ſhe had woven with her owne handes, as I knewe well after by her ſelf declaryng, and ſhewyng to me the beautie: The whiche clothes a darkneſſe of a forleten and diſpiſed elde had duſked and darked, as it is wonte to darke by ſmoked Images.

In the nethereſt hemme and border of theſe clothes menne redde iwoven therein a Grekiſhe A. that ſignifieth the life active, and above that letter, in the hieſt bordure, a Grekiſhe C. that ſignifieth the life contemplatife. And betwene theſe two letters there were ſeen degrees nobly wrought, in maner of ladders, by whiche degrees menne might climben from the nethereſt letter to the uppereſt: natheleſſe handes of ſome men hadden kerve that clothe, by violence or by ſtrength, and

COLVILE.

I THAT ih tyme of proſperite, and floryſhing ſtudye, made pleaſaunte and delectable dities, or verſes: alas now beyng heavy and ſad overthrowen in adverſitie, am compelled to fele and taſt mestines and greif. Beholde the muſes Poeticall, that is to ſaye: the pleaſure that is in poetes verſes, do appoynt me, and compel me to writ theſe verſes in meter, and the forowfull verſes do wet my wretched face with very watcrye teares, yſſuinge out of my eyes for ſorowe. Whiche muſes no feare without doute could overcome, but that they wold folow me in my iourney of exile or baniſhment. Sometyme the ioye of happy and luſty delectable youth dyd comfort me, and nowe the courſe of forowfull olde age cauſeth me to renoyſe. For haſty old age vnloked for is come vpon me with all her incommodities and envys, and ſorow hath commaunded and broughte me into the ſame old age, that is to ſay: that ſorowe cauſeth me to be olde, before my time come of olde age. The hoer heares do growe vntimely vpon my heade, and my reuiled ſkynne trembleth my fleſh, cleane conſumed and waſted with ſorowe. Mannes death is happy, that cometh not in youth, when a man is luſtye, and in plaſure or welth: but in time of adverſitie, when it is often deſyred. Alas Alas howe dull and deffe be the eares of cruel death vnto men in miſery that would fayne dye and yet refuſyth to come and ſhutte vp theyr carefull wepyng eyes. Whiles that falſe fortune favoryd me with her tranſitorye goodes, then the howre of death had almoſt overcom me. That is to ſay deathe was redy to oppreſſe me when I was in proſperitie. Nowe for by cauſe that fortune beynge turned, from proſperitie into adverſitie (as the clere day is darkyd with cloudes) and hath chaungyd her deceyuable countenaunce: my wretched life is yet prolonged and doth continue in dolour. O my frendes why haue you ſo often boſted me, ſayinge that I was happy when I had honor poſſeſſions riches, and authoritie whych be tranſitory thynges. He that hath fallen was in no ſtedefaſt degre.

WHYLES that I conſiderydde pryuy ye with my ſelfe the thynges before ſayd, and deſcrybed my wofull complaynte after the maner and offyce of a wrytter, me thought I ſawe a woman ſtand ouer my head of a reuerend countenaunce, hauyng quycke and glyſteryng clere eye, above the common ſorte of men in ryuely and delectable coloure, and full of ſtrength, although ſhe ſemed ſo olde that by no meanes ſhe is thought to be one of this oure tyme, her ſtature is of doutefull knowledge, for nowe ſhe ſhewethe herſelfe at the commen length or ſtatur of men, and other whiles ſhe ſemed ſo high, as though ſhe touched heuen with the crown of her hed. And when ſhe wold ſtretch fourth her hed hygher, it alſo perced thorough heauen, ſo that mens ſyghte couldc not attaine to behold her. Her veſtures or clothis were perfyt of fine ſtyffe thredes, and ſubtyll workemanſhyp, and of ſubſtaunce permament, whych veſturs ſhe had wouen with her own hands as I perceyued after by her owne ſayinge. The kynde or beawtye of the whyche veſtures, a certayne darkenes or rather ignoraunce of oldenes forgotten hadde obſcuryd and darkened, as the ſmoke is wont to darken Images that ſtand nygh the ſmoke. In the lower parte of the ſaid veſtures was read the greke letter P. wouen whych ſignifyeth practiſe or actyffe, and in the hygher part of the veſtures the greke letter. T. whych eſtandeth for theorica, that ſignifieth ſpeculation or contemplation. And betwene both the ſayd letters were ſene certayne degrees, wrought after the maner of ladders, whereon was as it were a paſſage or waye in ſteppes or degrees from the lower part wher the letter. P. was which is vnderſtand from practys or actyf, unto everiche manne of 'hem had borne awaie ſoche peces, as he might getten. And forſothe this foreſaied woman bare ſmale bokes in her right hande, and in her left hand ſhe bare a ſceptre. And when ſhe ſawe theſe Poeti call muſes approchyng about my bed, and endityng wordes to my wepynges, ſhe was a litle amoved, and glowed with cruell eyen. Who (q'ō ſhe) hath ſuffered approchen to this like manne theſe commen ſtrompettes, of which is the place that menne callen Theatre, the whiche onely ne aſſwagen not his ſorowes with remedies, but ther would feden and norriſhe hym with ſwete venime? Forſothe, that ben tho that with thornes, and prickynges of talentes of affeccions, whiche that ben nothyng fructuous nor profitable, diſtroien the Corne, plentuous of fruictes of reſon. For thei holden hertes of men in uſage, but thei ne deliver no folke fro maladie But if ye muſes had withdrawen fro me with your flatteries any unconnyng and unprofitable manne, as ben wont to finde commenly emong the peple, I would well ſuffre the laſſe grevouſly. For why, in ſoche an unprofitable man myne ententes were nothyng endamaged. But ye withdrowen fro me this man, that hath ben nourriſhed in my ſtudies or ſcoles of Eleaticis, and of Academicis in Grece. But goeth now rather awaie ye Mermaidens, whiche that ben ſwete, till it be at the laſt, and ſuffreth this man to be cured and heled by my muſes, that is to ſay, by my noteſull ſciences. And thus this companie of muſes iblamed caſten wrothly the chere dounward to the yerth, and ſhewing by redneſſe ther ſhame, thei paſſeden ſorowfully the threſholde. And I of whom the ſight pounged in teres was darked, ſo that I ne might not know what that woman was, of ſo Imperial auctoritie, I woxe all abaſhed and ſtonied, and caſt my ſight doune to the yerth, and began ſtil for to abide what ſhe would doen afterward. Then came ſhe nere, and ſet her doune upon the uttereſt corner of my bed, and ſhe beholdyng my chere, that was caſt to the yerth, hevie and grevous of wepyng, complained with theſe wordes (that I ſhall ſaine, the perturbacion of my thought.

the hygher parte wher the letter T. was whych is vnderſtand ſpeculacion or contemplacion. Neuerthe es, the handes of ſome vyolente perſones had cut the ſayde veſtures and had taken awaye certayne peces therof, ſuch as euery one coude catch. And ſhe her ſelfe dyd bare in her ryght hand two bokes, and in her leſte hande a ſceptre, which foreſayd phyloſophy (when ſhe ſaw the muſes poetycal preſent at my bed, ſpekyng ſorrowful wordes to my wepynges) beyng angry ſayd (with terrible or frownynge countenaance) who ſuffred theſe crafty harlotres to com to thys ſycke man? whych can help hym by no means of hys griefe by any kind of medicines, but rather increaſe the ſame with ſwete poyſon Theſe be they that doo dyſtroye the fertile and plentious commodytyes of reaſon and the fruytes therof wyth their pryckynge thornes, or barren affectes, and accuſtome or ſubdue mens myndes with ſickenes, and heuynes, and do not deuyer or heale them of the ſame. But yf your flatterye had conueyed or wythdrawen from me, any vnlernyd man as the comen ſorte of peop e are wonte to be, I couldе haue ben better contenyed, for in that my worke ſhould not be hurt or hynderyd. But you haue taken and conueyed from me thys man that hath ben broughte vp in the ſtudyes of Ariſtotel and of Plato But yet get you hence harlotrydis (that ſeme ſwete untyll you haue brought a man to deathe, and ſuffer me to heale thys my man wyth my muſes or ſcyences that be holſome and good. And after that philoſophy had ſpoken theſe wordes the ſayd companye of the muſys poetical beynge rebukyd and ſad, caſte down their countenaunce to the grounde, and by blu ſhyng confeſſed their ſhamfaſtnes, and went out of the dores. But I (that had my ſyght dull and blynd wyth wepyng, ſo that I knew not what woman this was hauyng ſoo great auctoritie) was amaſyd or aſtonyed, and lokyng downeward, towarde the grounde, I began pryvylye to look what thyng ſhe would ſaye further, then ſhe had ſaid. Then ſhe approchyng and drawynge nere vnto me, ſat downe vpon the vttermoſt part of my bed, and lokyng vpon my face ſad with weping, and declynyd toward the earth for ſorow, bewayled the troublе of my minde wych theſe ſayinges folowynge.

The concluſions of the ASTROLABIE.

This book (written to his ſon in the year of our Lord 1391, and in the 14 of King Richard II.) ſtandeth ſo good at this day, eſpecially for the horizon of Oxford, as in the opinion of the learned it cannot be amended, ſays an Edit. of Chaucer.

LYTEL Lowys my ſonne, I perceve well by certaine evidences thyne abylyte to lerne ſcyences, touching nombres and proporcions, and alſo well conſydre I thy beſye prayer in eſpecyal to lerne the tretyſe of the aſtrolabye. Than for as moche as a philoſopher ſaithe, he wrapeth hym in his frende, that condiſcendeth to the ryghtfull prayers of his frende: therfore I have given the a ſufficient aſtrolabye for oure orizont, compowned after the latitude of Oxenforde: upon the whiche by mediacion of this lyteil tretiſe, I purpoſe to teche the a certaine nombre of concluſions, pertainynge to this ſame inſtrument. I ſay a certaine nombre of concluſions for thre cauſes, the firſt cauſe is this. Truſte wel that al the concluſions that have be founden, or elis poſſiblye might be founde in ſo noble an inſtrument as in the aſtrolabye, ben unknowen perfitely to anye mortal man in this region, as I ſuppoſe. Another cauſe is this, that ſothely in any cartes of the aſtrolabye that I have yſene, ther ben ſome concluſions, that wol not in al thinges perfourme ther beheſtes: and ſome of 'hem ben to harde to thy tender age of ten yere to conceve. This tretiſe divided in five partes, wil I ſhewe the wondir light rules and naked wordes in Engliſhe, for Latine ne canſt thou nat yet but ſmale, my litel ſonne. But nevertheleſſe ſuffiſeth to the theſe trewe concluſyons in Engliſhe, as well as ſuffiſeth to theſe noble clerkes grekes theſe ſame concluſions in greke, and to the Arabines in Arabike, and to Jewes in Hebrewe, and to the Latin folke in Latyn: whiche Latyn folke had 'hem firſte out of other divers langages, and write 'hem in ther owne tonge, that is to ſaine in Latine.

And God wote that in all theſe languages and in manye mo, have theſe concluſyons ben ſufficientlye lerned and taught, and yet by divers rules, right as divers pathes leden divers folke the right waye to Rome.

Now wol I praye mekely every perſon diſcrete, that redeth or hereth this lityl tretiſe to have my rude ententing excuſed, and my ſuperfluite of wordes, for two cauſes. The firſt cauſe is, for that curious endityng and harde ſentences is ful hevy at ones, for ſoch a childe to lerne. And the ſeconde cauſe is this, that ſothely me ſemeth better to writen unto a childe twiſe a gode ſentence, than he forgete it ones. And, Lowis, if it be ſo that I ſhewe the in my rith Engliſhe, as trewe conclu-ſions touching this mater, and not only as trewe but as many and ſubtil concluſions as ben yſhewed in latin, in any comon tretiſe of the aſtrolabye, conne me the more thanke, and praye God ſave the kinge, that is lorde of this langage, and all that him faith bereth, and obeyeth everiche in his degree, the more and the laſſe. But conſydreth wel, that I ne uſurpe not to have founden this werke of my labour or of myne engin I n'ame but a leude compilatour of the laboure of olde aſtrologiens, and have it tranſlated in myn engliſhe onely for thy doctrine and with this ſwerde ſhal I ſlene envy

The firſt party.

The firſt partye of this tretiſe ſhall reherce the figures, and the membres of thyne aſtrolaby, bycauſe that thou ſhalte have the greter knowinge of thine owne inſtrument.

The ſeconde party.

The ſeconde partye ſhal teche the to werken the very practike of the foreſaid concluſions, as fertorthe and alſo narowe as may be ſhewed in ſo ſmale an inſtrument portatife aboute. For wel wote every aſtrologien, that ſmaleſt fractions ne wol not be ſhewed in ſo ſmal an inſtrument, as in ſubtil tables calculed for a cauſe.

The

The Prologue of the Testament of LOVE.

MANY then there ben, that with eres openly sprad so moche swalowen the delicioufneffe of feftes and of ryme, by queint knittinge coloures, that of the godeneffe or of the badneffe of the fentence take they litel hede or els none.

Sothelye dulle witte and a thoughtfulle foule fo fore have mined and graffed in my fpirites, that foche craft of enditinge woll nat ben of mine acquaintaunce. And for rude wordes and boiftous percen the herte of the herer to the inreft point, and planten there the fentence of thinges, fo that with litel helpe it is able to fpring, this boke, that nothynge hath of the grete flode of wytte, ne of feme yche colours, is dolven with rude wordes and boiftous, and fo drawe togiðer to maken the catchers therof ben the more redy to hent fentence.

Some men there ben, that painten with colours riche and fome with wers, as with red inke, and fome with coles and chalke: and yet is there gode matter to the leude peple of thylke chalkye purtreyture, as 'hem thinketh for the time, and afterward the fyght of the better colours yeven to 'hem more joye for the firft leudeneffe. So fothly this leude crowdy occupacyon is not to prayfe, but by the leude, for comenly leude leudeneffe commendeth. Eke it fhal yeve fight that other precyous thynges fhall be the more in reverence. In Latin and French hath many foveraine wittes had grete delyte to endite, and have many noble thinges fulfilde, but certes there ben fome that fpeken ther poifye matter in Frenche, of whiche fpeche the Frenche men have as gode a fantafye as we have in heryng of Frenche mens Englifhe. And many termes there ben in Englyfhe, whiche unneth we Englifhe men connen declare the knowleginge: howe fhould than a Frenche man borne? foche termes connejumpere in his matter, but as the jay chatereth Englifhe. Right fo truely the underftandyn of Englifhmen wol not ftretche to the privie termes in Frenche, what fo ever we boften of ftraunge langage. Let than clerkes enditen in Latin, for they have the propertie of fcience, and the knowinge in that faculte: and lette Frenche men in ther Frenche alfo enditen ther queint termes, for it is kyndely to ther mouthes; and let us fhewe our fantafies in fuch wordes as we lerneden of our dame's tonge. And although this boke be lytel thank worthy for the leudneffe in travaile, yet foch writing exiten men to thinke thinges that ben neceffarie: for every man therby may as by a perpetual myrrour fene the vices or vertues of other, in whyche thynges ghtly may be conceved to eichue perils, and neceffaries to catch, after as aventures have fallen to other peple or perfons.

Certes the foverainft thinge of defire and moft creature refonable, have or els fhuld have full appetite to ther perfectyon: unrefonable beftes mowen not, fithe refon hath in 'hem no workinge: than refonable that wol not, is comparifoned to unrefonable, and made lyke 'hem. Forfothe the moft foveraine and final perfeccion of man is in knowynge of a fothe, withouten any entent decevable, and in love of one very God, that is inchaungeable, that is to knowe, and love his creator.

Nowe principally the mene to brynge in knowleging and lovynge his creatour, is the confideracyon of thynges made by the creatour, wher through by thylke thinges that ben made, underftandynge here to our wyttes, arne the unfene pryvities of God made to us fyghtfull and knowinge, in our contemplacion and underftondinge. Thefe thinges than forfothe moche bringen us to the ful knowleginge fothe, and to the parfyte love of the maker of heven y thynges. Lo! David faith: thou haft de.ted me in making, as who faith, to have delite in the tune how God hat lent me in confideracion of thy makinge. Wherof Ariftotle in the boke de Animalibus, faith to naturell philofophers: it is a grete lykynge in love of knowinge ther creatoure: and alfo in knowinge of caufes in kindelye thynges, confidrid forfothe the formes of kindelye thinges and the fhap, a kyndelye love we fhulde have to the werkman that them made. The crafte of a werkman is fhewed in the wers. Therefore trulie the philofophers with a lyvely [illegible] mand noble thinges, right precious, and worthy to memorye, writen, and by a gret fwet and travaille to us lefton of cauſes the properties in natures of thinges, to whiche therfore philofophers it was more joy, more lykinge, more herty luft in kindely vertues and matters of refon the perfeccion by bufy ftudy to knowe, than to have had all the trefour, al the richeffe, al the vaine glory, that the paffed emperours, princes, or kinges hadden. Therfore the names of 'hem in the boke of perpetual memorie in vertue and pece arne writen; and in the contrarie, that is to faine, in Styxe the foule pitte of helle arne thinke preffed that foch godenes hated. And becaufe this boke fhall be of love, and the prime cauſes of ftering in that doinge with paffions and diſeſes for wantinge of defire, I wil that this boke be cleped the teftament of love.

But nowe thou reder, who is thilke that will not fcorne laughe, to here a dwarfe or els halfe a man, fay he wil rende out the fwerde of Hercules handes, and alfo he fhulde fet Hercules Gades a mile yet ferther, and over that he had power of ftrength to pull up the fpere, that Anfander the noble might never wagge, and that paſſinge al thinge to ben mayfter of Fraunce by might, there as the noble gracious Edwarde the thirde for al his grete proweffe in victories ne might al yet conquere?

Certes I wote well, ther fhall be made more fcorne and jape of me, that I fo unworthely clothed altogither in the cloudie cloude of unconning, wil putten me in prees to fpeak of love, or els of the cauſes in that matter, fithen al the gretteft clerkes han had ynough to don, and as who faith gathered up clene toforne 'hem, and with ther fharp fithes of conning al mowen and made therof grete rekes and noble, ful of al plenties to fede me and many an other. Envye forfothe commendeth noughte his refon, that he hath in him, be it never fo truſty. And although theſe noble repers, as gode workmen and worthy ther hier, han a draw and bounde up in the fheves, and made many fhockes, yet have I enfample to gaðer the fmale crommes, and fulfin ma walet of tho that fallen from the bourde among the fmalle houndes, notwithſtanding the travaile of the almoigner, that hath draw up in the cloth al the remſſailes, as trenchours, and the relefe to bere to the almeſſe. Yet alſo have I leve of the noble hufbande Boece, although I be a ſtraunger of conninge to come after his doctrine, and theſe grete workmen, and glene my handfuls of the ſhedynge after ther handes, and yf me faile ought of my ful, to encreſe my portion with that I ſhal drawe by privyties out of ſhockes; a flye ſervaunte in his owne helpe is often moche commended; knowynge of trouthe in cauſes of thynges, was more hardier in the firſte fechers, and ſo ſayth Ariſtotle, and lighter in us that han folowed after. For ther paſſing ſtudy han freſhed our wittes, and oure underſtandynge han excited in conſideracion of trouth by ſharpenes of ther reſons. Utterly theſe thinges be no dremes ne japes, to throwe to hogges, it is lyfelych mete for children of trouth, and as they me beriden whan I pilgramed out of my kith in wintere, whan the wether out of meſure was boiſtous, and the wyld wynd Boreas, as his kind aſketh, with dryinge coldes maked the wawes of the ocean ſe ſo to arife unkindely over the commune bankes that it was in point to ſpill all the erthe.

The Prologues of the Canterbury Tales of CHAUCER, from the MSS.

WHEN that April's with his ſhoures ſote,
The drought of March had perced to the rote,
And bathed every veyn in ſuch licour,
Of which vertue engendrid is the flour.
When Zephyrus eke, with his ſweté breth
Enſpirid hath, in every holt and heth
The tender croppes; and that the yong Sunn
Hath in the Ramm his halve cours yronn
And ſmaè foules makin melodye,
That ſlepin alle night with open eye,
(So pricketh them nature in ther corage,
Then longin folk to go on pilgrimage.
And palmers for to ſekin ſtrangè ſtrondes,
To ſervin hallowes couth in ſondry londes:
And ſpecially fro every ſhir's end
Of England, to Canterbury they wend,

The holy blisfull martyr for to seke,
That them hath holpin, whan that they were seke.
Befel that in that seson on a day
In Southwerk at the Tabberd as I lay,
Redy to wendin on my pilgrimage
To Canterbury, with devote corage,
At night wer come into that hostery
Wele nine and twenty in a compary
Of sundrie folk, by aventure yfall
In felaship; and pilgrimes wer they all;
That toward Canterbury wouldin ride.
The chambers and the stables werin wide,
And well we werin esid at the best:
And shortly whan the sunnè was to rest,
So had I spokin with them everych one,
That I was of ther felaship anone,
And madè forward erli for to rise,
To take our weye, ther as I did devise.
But nathless while that I have time and space,
Er' that I farther in this talè pace,
Methinketh it accordaunt to reson,
To tell you alle the condition
Of ech of them, so as it semid me,
And which they werin, and of what degree,
And eke in what array that they wer in:
And at a knight then will I first begin.

The KNIGHT.

A knight ther was, and that a worthy man,
That fro the time that he first began
To ridin out, he lovid Chevalrie,
Trouth and honour, fredome and curtesy.
Full worthy was he in his lord'is werre,
And therto had he riddin nane more ferre
As well in Christendom, as in Hethnesse,
And evyr honoured for his worthinesse.
At Alessandre' he was whan it was won;
Full oft times he had the bord begon
Abovin alle nacioums in Pruce,
In Lettow had he riddin, and in Luce,
No Christen-man so oft of his degree
In Granada; in the sege had he be
Of Algezir, and ridd in Belmary;
At Leyis was he, and at Sataly,
Whan that they wer won; and in the grete see
At many'a noble army had be be:
At mortal battails had he ben fiftene,
And foughtin for our feith at Tramesene,
In listis thrys, and alwey slein his fo.
This ilke worthy knight had ben also
Sometimis with the lord of Palathy,
Ayens anothir hethin in Turky,
And evirmore he had a sov'rane prize,
And though that he was worthy, he was wise;
And of his port as meke as is a maid,
He nevir yet no vilany ne said
In all his life unto no manner wight.
He was a very parfit gentil knight.
But for to tell you of his array,
His hors wer good; but he was nothing gay,
Of fustian he werid a gipon,
Alle besmottrid with his habergeon.
For he was late ycome from his viage,
And wentè for to do his pilgrimage.

The House of FAME.

The First Boke.

NOW herkin, as I have you saied,
What that I mette or I abraied,
Of December the tenith date,
When it was night, to slepe I laie,
Right as I was wonte for to doen,
And fill aslepè wondir sone,
As he that was werie forgo
On pilgrimagè miles two
To the corps of saincte Leonarde,
To make mine lithe that erst was harde.
But as me slept me mette I was
Within a temple' imade of glas,
In whiche there werin mo images
Of golde, standyng in sondrie stages,
Sette in mo riche tabirnacles,
And with perrè mo pinnacles,
And mo curious portraituris,
And queint manir of figuris
Of goude worke, then I sawe ever
But certainly I nist nevir
Where that it was, but well wist I
It was of Venus reuly
This temple, for in purtreiture
I sawe anone right her figure
Nakid yfletyng in a se,
And also on her hedde parde
Her rosy garland white and redde,
And her comòe for to kembe her hedde,
Her dovis, and Dan Cupido
Her blindè sonne, and Volcano,
That in his face ywas full broune
But as I romid up and doune,
I founde that on the wall there was
Thus writtin on a table' of bras.
I woll now syng, if that I can,
The armis, and also the man,
That first came through his destine
Fugitife fro Troye the countre
Into Italie, with full moche pine,
Unto the strondis of Lavine,
And tho began the storie' anone,
As I shall teilin you echone.
First sawe I the distruccion
Of Troie, thorough the Greke Sinon,
With his false untrue forswerynges,
And with his chere and his lesynges,
That made a horse, brought into Troye,
By whuche Trojans loste all ther joye.
And after this was graved, alas!
How Ilions castill assailed was,
And won, and kyng Priamus slain,
And Polites his sonne certain,
Dispitously of Dan Pyrrhus.
And next that sawè I howe Venus,
When that she sawe the castil brende,
Doune from hevin she gan discende,
And bade her sonne Æneas flè,
And how he fled, and how that he
Escapid was from all the pres,
And toke his fathre', old Anchises,
And bare hym on his backe awaie,
Crying alas and welawaie!
The whiche Anchises in his hande,
Bare tho the goddis of the lande
I mene thilke that unbrennid were.
Then sawe I next that all in fere
How Creusa, Dan Æneas wife,
Whom that he lovid all his life,
And eer yong sonne clepid Julio,
And eke Ascanius also,
Fledden eke, with full drerie chere,
That it was pite for to here,
And in a forest as ther went
How at a tournyng of a went
Creusa was loste, alas!
That rede not I, how that it was
How he her sought, and how her ghoste
Bad hym to flie the Grekis hoste,
And saied he must into Itaile,
As was his destinie, sauns faile,
That it was pitie for to here,
When that her sprite gan appere,
The wordis that she to hym saied,
And for to kepe her sonne hym praied.
There sawe I gravin eke how he
His fathir eke, and his meinè,
With his shippis began to saile
Toward the countrey of Italie,
As streight as ere thei mighten go.
There sawe I eke the, cruill Juno,
That art Dan Jupiter his wife,
That hast ishend all thy life

Merciles

Mercileſs all the Trojan blode,
Rennin and crie as thou were wode
On Æolus, the god of windes,
To blowin out of alle kindes
So loude, that he ſhou'd ydrenche
Lorde, and ladie, and gromе, and wenche
Of all the Trojanis nation,
Without any' of ther ſavacion
There ſawe I ſoche tempeſt arise,
That every herte might agriſe
To ſe it paintid on the wall
There ſawe I eke gravin withall,
Venus, how ye, my ladie dere,
Ywepyng with full wofull chere
Yprayid Jupiter on hie,
To ſave and kepin that navie
Of that dere Trojan Æneas,
Sithins that he your ſonne ywas.

Gode counſaile of CHAUCER.

FLIE fro the preſe and dwell with ſothfaſtneſſe,
Suffiſe unto thy gode though it be ſmall,
For horde hath hate, and climbyng tikelneſſe,
Prece hath envie, and wele it brent oer all,
Savour no more then the behovin ſhall,
Rede wel thy ſelf, that othir folke canſt rede,
And trouthe the ſhall delivir it 'is no drede.
Paine the not eche crokid to redreſſe,
In truſt of her that tourneth as a balle,
Grete reſt ſtandith in litil buſineſſe,
Beware alſo to ſpurne again a nalle,
Strive not as doith a crocke with a walle,
Demith thy ſelf that demiſt othir's dede,
And trouthe the ſhall delivir it 'is no drede.
That the is ſent receive in buxomneſſe,
The wraſtlyng of this worlde aſkith a fall;
Here is no home, here is but wildirneſſe,
Forthe pilgrim, forthe o beſt out of thy ſtall,
Loke up on high, and thanke thy God of all,
Weivith thy luſte and let thy ghoſt the lede,
And trouthe the ſhall delivir, it 'is no drede.

Balade of the village without paintyng.

THIS wretchid world'is transmutacion
As wele and wo, nowe pore, and now honour,
Without ordir or due diſcrecion
Govirnid is by fortun'is errour,
But natheleſſe the lacke of her favour
Ne make not die me ſyng though that I die,
Jay tout perdu, mon temps & mon labeur
For finally fortune I doe defie.
Yet is me left the ſight of my reſoun
To knowin frende fro foe in thy mirrour,
So moche hath yet thy tournyng up and doun,
Itaughtin me to knowin in an hour,
But truly no force of thy reddour
To hym that ovir hymſelf hath maiſtrie,
My ſuffiſaunce yſhal be my ſuccour,
For finally fortune I do defie.
O Socrates, thou ſtedfaſt champion,
She ne might nevir be thy turmentour,
Thou nevir dreddiſt her oppreſſion,
Ne in her chere foundin thou no favour,
Thou knewe wele the diſceipt of her colour,
And that her moſte worſhip is for to lie,
I knowe her eke a falſe diſſimulour,
For finally fortune I do defie.

The anſwere of Fortune.

No man is wretchid but hymſelf it wene,
He that yhath hymſelf hath ſuffiſaunce,
Why ſaieſt thou then I am to the ſo kene,
That haſt thy ſelf out of my govirnaunce?
Saie thus grant mercie of thin habundaunce,
That thou haſt ſent of this, thou ſhalt not ſtrive,
What woſt thou yet how I the will avaunce?
And eke thou haſt thy beſte frende alive.
I have the taught diviſion betwene
Frende of effecte, and frende of countinaunce,
The nedith not the galle of an hine,
That curith eyin derke for ther penaunce,
Now ſeeſt thou clere that wer in ignoraunce,
Yet holt thine anker, and thou maieſt arive
There bountie bereth the key of my ſuboſtaunce,
And eke thou haſte thy beſte frende alive.
How many have I refuſed to ſuſtene,
Sith I have the foſtrid in thy pleſaunce?
Wolt thou then make a ſtature on thy quene,
That I ſhall be are at thine ordinaunce?
Thou born art in my reign of variaunce,
About the whele with othir muſt thou drive
My lore is bet, then wicke is thy grevaunce,
And eke thou haſt thy beſte frende alive.

The anſwere to Fortune.

Thy lore I dampne, it is adverſitie,
My frend maiſt thou not revin bind goddeſſe,
That I thy frendis knowe I thanke it the,
Take 'hem again, let 'hem go lie a preſſe,
The nigardis in kepyng ther richeſſe
Pronoſtike is thou wolt ther toure aſſaile,
Wicke appetite cometh aie before ſickeneſſe,
In general this rule ne maie not faile.

Fortune

Thou pinchiſt at my mutabilite,
For I the lent a droppe of my richeſſe,
And now me lieth to withdrawin me,
Why ſhouldiſt thou my roialtie oppreſſe?
The ſe maie ebbe and flowin more and leſſe,
The welkin hath might to ſhine, rain, and haile,
Right ſo muſt I kithin my brotilneſſe,
In general this rule ne maie not faile.

The Plaintiffe.

Lo, the' execucion of the majeſtie,
That all purveighith of his rightwiſeneſſe,
That ſame thyng fortune yclepin ye,
Ye blindè beſtis fol of leudèneſs!
The heven hath propirtie of ſtarneſs,
This worldè hath evir reſtleſſe travaile,
The laſt daie is the ende of myne entreſſe,
In generall this rule ne maie not faile.

Th' envoye of Fortune.

Princes I praie you of your gentilneſſe,
Let not this man and me thus crie and plaine,
And I ſhall quitin you this buſineſſe,
And if ye liſte releve hym of his paine,
Praie ye his beſt frende of his nobleneſſe
That to ſome bettir ſtate he maie attaine.

Lydgate was a monk of Bury, who wrote about the ſame time with Chaucer. Out of his prologue to his third book of the Fall of Princes a few ſtanzas are ſelected, which, being compared with the ſtyle of his two contemporaries, will ſhow that our language was then not written by caprice, but was in a ſettled ſtate.

LIKE a pilgrime which that goeth on foote,
And hath none horſe to releve his travaile,
Whote, drye and wery, and may find no bote
Of wel cold whan thruſt doth hym aſſaile,
Wine nor licour, that may to hym availe,
Right ſo fare I which in my buſineſſe,
No ſuccour tynde my rudenes to redreſſe.
I meane as thus, I have no freſh licour
Out of the conduites of Calliope,
Nor through Caballino in rhetho ike no floure,
In my labour for to refreſh me:
Nor of the ſuſters in noumber thre ſe three,
Which with Cytheria on Parnaſo dwell,
They neuer me gave drinke once of their well,
Nor of theyr ſpringes clere and chriſtaline,
That ſprange by touchyng of the Pegaſe,
Their favour lacketh my making ten founde
I fynde theyr bawme of ſo great ſcarcite,
To tame their tunnes with ſome drop of plentie
For Poliphemus throw his great blindnes,
Hath in me derked of Argus the brightnes.

Our

Our life here ſhort of wit the great daines
The heuy ſoule troubled with trauayle,
And of memorye the glaſyng brotelnes,
Drede and vncunning haue made a ſtrong batail
With wemes my ſpirite to aſſayle,
And with their ſubtil creping in moſt queint
Hath made my ſpirit in makyng for to feint.
And euermore, the ferefull frowardnes
Of my ſtepmother called oblyuion,
Hath a baſtyll of forgetfulnes,
To ſtoppe the paſſage, and ſhadow my reaſon
That I might haue no clere direccion,
In tranſlating of new to quicke me,
Stories to write of olde antiquite.
Thus was I fet and ſtode in double werre
At the metyng of feareful wayes tweyne,
The one was this, who euer liſt to lere,
Whereas good wyll gan me conſtreyne,
Bochas taccompaſh for to doe my payne,
Came ignorance, with a menace of drede,
My penne to reſt I durſt not procede.

Forteſcue was chief juſtice of the Common-Pleas, in the reign of king Henry VI. He retired in 1471. after the battle of Tewkeſbury, and probably wrote moſt of his works in his privacy. The following paſſage is ſelected from his book of the Difference between an abſolute and limited Monarchy.

HYT may peraventure be marveild by ſome men, why one Realme is a Lordſhyp only Royall, and the Prynce thereof rulyth yt by his Law, called Jus Regale; and another Kyngdome is a Lordſchip, Royal and Politike, and the Prince thereof rulyth by a Lawe, callyd Jus Politicum & Regale; ſythen thes two Princes beth of egall Aſtate.

To this dowte it may be anſweryd in this manner; The firſt Inſtitution of thes twoo Realmys, upon the Incorporation of them, is the Cauſe of this diverſyte.

When Nembroth by Might, for his own Glorye, made and incorporate the firſt Realme, and ſubduyd it to hymſelf by Tyrannye, he would not have it governyd by any other Rule or Lawe, but by his own Will; by which and for th' accompliſhment thereof he made it. And therfor, though he had thus made a Realme, holy Scripture denyyd to cal hym a Kyng, Quia Rex dicitur a Regendo; Whych thyng he dyd not, but oppreſſyd the People by Myght, and therfor he was a Tyrant, and called Primus Tyrannorum. But holy Writ calleth hym Robuſtus Venator coram Deo. For as the Hunter takyth the wyld beſte for to ſle and eate hym; ſo Nembroth ſubduyd to him the People with Might, to have their ſervice and their goodes, uſing upon them the Lordſchip that is called Dominum Regale tantum. After hym Belus that was callid firſt a Kyng, and after hym his Sone Ninus, and after hym other Panyms; They, by Example of Nembroth, made them Realmys, would not have them rulyd by other Lawys than by their own Wills. Which Lawys ben right good under good Princes, and their Kyngdoms a then moſt reſemblyd to the Kyngdome of God, which reyneth upon Man, rulyng him by hys own Will. Wherfor many Cryſtyn Princes uſen the ſame Lawe; and therfor it is, that the Lawys ſayen, Quod Principi placuit Legis habet vigorem. And thus I ſuppoſe firſt begonne in Realmys, Dominum tantum Regale. But afterward, whan Mankynd was more manſuete, and better diſpoſyd to Vertue, Grete Communaltes, as was the Feliſhip, that came into this Lond with Brute, wylyng to be unyed and made a Body Politike callid a Realme, havyng an Heed to governe it, as after the Saying of the Philoſopher, every Communaltie unyed of many parts muſt needs have an Heed, than they choſe the ſame Brute to be their Heed and Kyng. And they and he upon this Incorporation and Inſtitution, and onyng of themſelf into a Realme, ordeynyd the ſame Realme ſo to be rulyd and juſtyfyd by ſuch Lawys, as they al would aſſent unto; which Law therfor is callid Politicum; and bycauſe it is mynyſtrid by a Kyng, it is callid Regale. Dominium Politicum & Regale quaſi Regimen, plurium Scientia, ſive Conſilio miniſtratum. The Kyng of Scotts reyneth upon his People by this Lawe, vinelices, Regimine Politico & Regali. And as Diodorus Syculus ſaith, in his Boke de priſcis Hiſtoriis, The Realme of Egypte is rulid by the ſame Lawe, and therfor the Kyng therof chaungith not his Lawes, without the Aſſent of his People. And in like forme as he ſaith is rulid the Kyngdome of Saba, in Felici Arabia, and the Lond of Libie; And alſo the more parte of al the Realmys in Affrike. Which manner of Rule and Lordſhip, the ſayd Diodorus in that Boke, prayſith gretely. For it is not only good for the Prince, that may thereby the more fewerly do Juſtice, than by his owne Arbitriment; but it is alſo good for his People that receyve therby, ſuch Juſtice as they deſyer themſelf. Now as me ſeymth, it ys ſhewyd openly ynough, why one Kyng rulyth and reynith on his People Dominio tantum Regali, and that other reynith Dominio Politico & Regali. For that one Kyngdome beganne, of and by, the Might of the Prince, and that other beganne, by the Deſier and Inſtitution of the People of the ſame Prince.

Of the works of Sir Thomas More it was neceſſary to give a larger ſpecimen, both becauſe our language was then in a great degree formed and ſettled, and becauſe it appears from Ben Johnſon, that his works were conſidered as models of pure and elegant ſtyle. The tale, which is placed firſt, becauſe earlieſt written, will ſhow what an attentive reader will, in peruſing our old writers, often remark, that the familiar and colloquial part of our language, being diffuſed among thoſe claſſes who had no ambition of refinement, or affectation of novelty, has ſuffered very little change. There is another reaſon why the extracts from this authour are more copious: his works are carefully and correctly printed, and may therefore be better truſted than any other edition of the Engliſh books of that, or the preceding ages.

A merry jeſt how a ſergeant would learne to playe the frere. Written by maiſter Thomas More in hys youth.

WYSE men alway,
Affyrme and ſay,
That beſt is for a man:
Diligently,
For to apply,
The buſines that he can,
And in no wyſe,
To enterpryſe,
An other faculte,
For he that wyll,
And can no ſkyll,
Is neuer lyke to the.
He that hath laſte,
The hoſiers crafte,
And faileth to making ſhone,
The ſmythe that ſhall,
To payntyng fall,
His thrift is well nigh done.
A blacke draper,
With whyte paper,
To goe to writyng ſcole,
An olde butler,
Becum a cutler,
I wene ſhall proue a fole
And an olde trot,
That can I wot,
Nothyng but kyſſe the cup,
With her phiſick,
Wil kepe one ſicke,
Tyll ſhe haue ſouſed hym vp.
A man of lawe,
That neuer ſawe,
The wayes to bye and ſelle,
Wenyng to ryſe,
By marchaundiſe,
I wiſh to ſpede hym well.
A marchaunt eke,
That wyll goo ſeke,
By all the meanes he may,
To fall in ſtate,
Fy the diſpate,
His money cleane away,

Pletyng the lawe,
For euery ſtrawe,
  Shall proue a thrifty man;
With bate and ſtrife,
But by my life,
  I cannot tell you whan.
Whan an hatter
Wyll go ſmatter,
  In philoſophy,
Or a pedlar,
Ware a medlar,
  In theology,
All that enſue,
Suche craftes new,
  They driue ſo farre a caſt;
That euermore,
They do therfore,
  Beſhrewe themſelfe at laſt.
This thing was tryed
And verefyed,
  Here by a ſergeaunt late,
That thriftly was,
Or he coulde pas,
  Rapped about the pate,
Whyle that he would
See how he could,
  A little play the frere:
Now yf you wyll,
Knowe how it fyll,
  Take hede and ye ſhall here:
It happed ſo,
Not long ago,
  A thrifty man there dyed,
An hundred pounde,
Of nobles rounde,
  That had he layd a ſide:
His ſonne he wolde,
Should haue this golde,
  For to beginne with all:
But to ſuffiſe
His chylde, well thriſe,
  That money was to ſmal.
Yet or this day
I have hard ſay,
  That many a man certeſſe,
Hath with good caſt,
Be ryche at laſt,
  That hath begonne with leſſe.
But this yonge manne,
So well beganne,
  His money to imploy,
That certainly,
His policy,
  To ſee it was a joy,
For leſt ſum blaſt,
Myght ouer caſt,
  His ſhip, or by miſchaunce,
Men with ſum wile,
Myght hym begyle,
  And miniſh his ſubſtaunce,
For to put out,
All maner dout,
  He made a good purueay,
For euery whyt,
By his owne wyt,
  And toke an other way.
Firſt fayre and weie,
Therof much dele,
  He dygged it in a pot,
But then him thought,
That way was nought,
  And there he left it not.
So was he faine,
From thence agayne,
  To put it in a cup,
And by and by,
Couetouſly,
  He ſupped it fayre vp,
In his owne breſt,
He thought it beſt,
  His money to encloſe,
Then wiſt he well,
What euer fel,
  He coulde it neuer loſe.
He borrowed then,
Of other men,
  Money and marchaundiſe:
Neuer payd it,
Up he laid it,
  In like maner wyſe,
Yet on the gere,
That he would were,
  He reight not what he ſpent,
So it were nyce,
As for the price,
  Could him not miſcontent.
With lufty ſporte,
And with reſort,
  Of holy company,
In mirth and play,
Full many a day,
  He rued merely.
And men had ſworne,
Some man is borne,
  To haue a lucky howre,
And ſo was he,
For ſuch degre,
  He gat and ſuche honour,
That without dout,
Whan he went out,
  A ſergeaunt welt and fayre.
Was redy ſtrayte,
On him to wayte,
  As ſone as on the mayre.
But he doubteſſe,
Of his mekeneſſe,
  Hated ſuch pompe and pride,
And would not go,
Compared ſo,
  But drewe himſelf a ſide,
To ſaint Katharine,
Stre ght as a line,
  He gate him at a tyde,
For deuocion,
Or promocion,
  There would he nedes abyde.
There ſpent he fa t,
Till all were paſt,
  And to him came there meny,
To aſke theyr det,
But none could get,
  The valour of a peny.
With viſage ſtout,
He bare it out,
  Euen vnto the harde hedge,
A month or twaine,
Tyll he was faine,
  To laye his gowne to pledge.
Than was he there,
In greater feare,
  Than ere that he came thither,
And would as fayne,
Depart againe,
  But that he wiſt not whither.
Than after this,
To a frende of his,
  He went and there abode,
Where as he lay,
So ſick alway,
  He myght not come abrode.
It happed than,
A marchant man,
  That he ought money to,
Of an officere,
Than gan enquere,
  What him was beſt to do.
And he anſwerde,
Be not aferde,
  Take an accion therfore,
I you beheſte,
I ſhall hym reſte,
  And than care for no more.

I feare quod he,
It wyll not be,
For he wyll not come out.
The ſergeaunt ſaid,
Be not afrayd.
It ſhall be brought about.
In many a game,
Lyke to the ſame,
Haue I bene well in vre,
And for your ſake,
Let me be bake,
But yf I do this cure.
Thus part they both,
And foorth [illegible],
A pace this officere,
And for a day,
All his array,
He chaunged with a frere.
So was he dight,
That no man might,
Hym for a frere deny,
He dopped and dooked,
He ſpake and looked,
So religiouſly.
Yet in a glaſſe,
Or he would paſſe,
He toted and he peered,
His harte for pryde,
Lepte in his ſyde,
To ſee how well he freered.
Than forth a pace,
Unto the place,
He goeth withouten ſhame
To do this dede,
But now take hede,
For here begynneth the game.
He drew hym ny,
And ſoftely,
Streyght at the dore he knocked.
And a damſell,
That hard hym well,
There came and it vnlocked.
The frere ſayd,
Good ſpede fayre mayd,
Here lodgeth ſuch a man,
It is told me:
Well ſyr quod ſhe,
And yf he do what than.
Quod he mayſtreſſe,
No harme doutleſſe:
It longeth for our order,
To hurt no man,
But as we can,
Euery wight to forder.
With hym truly,
Fayne ſpeake would I.
Sir quod ſhe by my fay,
He is ſo ſike,
Ye be not lyke,
To ſpeake with hym to day.
Quod he fayre may,
Yet I you pray,
This much at my deſire,
Vouchеſafe to do,
As go hym to,
And ſay an auſten frere
Would with hym ſpeke,
And matters breake,
For his auayle certayn.
Quod ſhe I wyll,
Stonde ye here ſtyll,
Tyll I come downe agayn.
Vp is ſhe go,
And told hym ſo,
As ſhe was bode to ſay,
He miſtruſtyng,
No maner thyng,
Sayd mayden go thy way,
And fetch him hyder,
That we togyder,
May talk. A downe ſhe gothe,

Vp ſhe hym brought,
No harme ſhe thought,
But it made ſome folke wrothe.
This officere,
This fayned frere,
Whan he was come aloft,
He dopped than,
And grete this man,
Reſpectfully and oft.
And he agayn,
Ryght glad and fayn,
Toke hym there by the hande,
The frere than ſayd,
Ye be diſmayd,
With trouble I underſtande.
In dede quod he,
It hath with me,
Bene better than it is.
Syr quod the frere,
Be of good chere,
Yet ſhall it after this.
But I would now,
Comen with you,
In counſayle yf you pleaſe,
Or ellys nat
Of matters that,
Shall ſet your heart at eaſe.
Downe went the mayd,
The marchaunt ſayd,
Now ſay on gentle frere,
Of thys tydyng,
That ye me bryng,
I long full ſore to here.
Whan there was none,
But they alone,
The frere with euyll grace,
Sayd, I reſt the,
Come on with me,
And out he toke his mace:
Thou ſhalt obay,
Come on thy way,
I have the in my clouche,
Thou goeſt not hence,
For all the penſe,
The mayre hath in his pouche.
This marchaunt there,
For wrath and fere,
He waxyng welnygh wood,
Sayd horſon thefe,
With a miſchefe,
Who hath taught the thy good.
And with his fiſt,
Vpon the noſt,
He gaue hym ſuch a blow,
That backward downe,
Almoſt in ſowne,
The frere is ouerthrow.
Yet was this man,
Well fearder than,
Leſt he the frere had ſlayne,
Tyll with good rappes,
And hevy clappes,
He dawde hym vp agayne.
The frere toke harte,
And vp he ſtarte,
And weel he wyde about,
And ſo there goth,
Betwene them both,
Many a luſty clout.
They rent and tere,
Eche others here,
And clawe togyder faſt,
Tyll with luggyng,
And with taggyng,
They fell downe bothe at laſt
Than on the grounde,
Togyder rounde,
With many a ſadde ſtroke,
They roll and rumble,
They turne and tumble,
As pygges do in a poke.

So

So long aboue,
They heue and ſhoue,
Together that at laſt,
The mayd and wyfe,
To breake the ſtrife,
Hyed them vpward faſt.
And whan they ſpye,
The captaynes lye,
Both watring on the place,
The freres hood,
They pulled a good,
Adowne about his face.
Whyle he was blynde,
The wenche behynde,
Lent him leyd on the flore,
Many a toule,
About the noule,
With a great batyldore.
The wyfe came yet,
And with her fete,
She holpe to kepe him downe,
And with her rocke,
Many a knocke,
She gaue hym on the crowne.
They layd his mace,
About his face,
That he was wood for payne:
The fryre frappe,
Gate many a wappe,
Tyll he was full nygh ſlayne.
Vp they hym lift,
And with yll thrift,
Hedlyng a long the ſtayre,
Downe they hym threwe,
And ſayde adewe,
Commende us to the mayre.
The frere aroſe,
But I ſuppoſe,
Amaſed was his hed,
He ſhoke his eares,
And from grete feares,
He thought hym well yſled.
Quod he now loſt,
Is all this coſt,
We be neuer the nere.
Ill mote he be,
That cauſed me,
To make my ſelf a frere.
Now maſters all,
Here now I ſhall,
Ende there as I began,
In any wyſe,
I would aduyſe,
And counſayle euery man,
His owne craft vſe,
And newe refuſe,
And lyghtly let them gone:
Play not the frere,
Now make good chere,
And welcome euerych one.

A ruful lamentacion (writen by maſter Thomas More in his youth) of the deth of quene Eliſabeth mother to king Henry the eight, wife to king Henry the ſeuenth, and eldeſt doughter to king Edward the fourth, which quene Eliſabeth dyed in childbed in February in the yere of our Lord 1503, and in the 18 yere of the raigne of king Henry the ſeuenth.

O Ye that put your truſt and confidence,
In worldly ioy and frayle proſperite,
That ſo lyue here as ye ſhould neuer hence,
Remember death and loke here vppon me.
Enſample I thynke there may no better be
Your ſelfe wotte well that in this realme was I,
Your quene but late, and lo now here I lye
Was I not borne of olde worthy linage?
Was not my mother queene my father kyng?
Was I not a kinges fere in marriage?
Had I not plenty of euery pleaſaunt thyng?
Merciful god this is a ſtraunge reckenyng:
Rycheſſe, honour, welth, and auncеſtry?
Hath me forſaken and lo now here I ly.

If worſhip myght haue kept me, I had not gone.
If wyt myght haue me ſaued, I neded not fere
If money myght haue holpe, I lacked none.
But O good God what vayleth al this gere.
When deth is come thy mighty meſſangere,
Obey we muſt there is no remedy,
Me hath he ſommoned, and lo now here I ly.
Yet was I late promiſed otherwyſe,
This yere to lyue in welth and delice.
Lo where to commeth thy blandiſhyng promyſe,
O falſe aſtrology and deuynatrice,
Of goddes ſecretes makyng thy ſelfe ſo wyſe.
How true is for this yere thy prophecy.
The yere yet laſteth, and lo nowe here I ly.
O bryttil welth, as full of bitterneſſe,
Thy ſingle pleaſure doubled is with payne.
Account my ſorow firſt and my diſtreſſe,
In ſondry wyſe, and reckon there agayne,
The ioy that I haue had, and I dare layne,
For all my honour, endured yet haue I,
More wo then welth, and ſo now here I ly.
Where are our caſtels, now where are our towers.
Goodly Rychmonde ſone art thou gone from me,
At Weſtminſter that coſtly worke of yours,
Myne owne dere lorde now ſhall I neuer ſee.
Almighty god vouchſafe to graunt that ye,
For you and your children well may edefy.
My payne by ded is, and lo now here I ly.
Adew myne owne dere ſpouſe my worthy lorde,
The faithful loue, that dyd vs both combyne,
In marriage and peurable concorde,
Into your handes here I cleane reſyne,
To be beſtowed vppon your children and myne.
Erſt wer you father, and now muſt ye ſupply.
The mothers part alſo, for lo now here I ly.
Farewel my doughter lady Margerete.
God wotte full oft it greued hath my mynde,
That ye ſhould go where we ſhould ſeldome mete.
Now am I gone, and haue left you behynde.
O mortall folke that we be very blynde.
That we leaſt feare, full oft it is moſt nye,
From you depart I fyrſt, and lo now here I lye.
Farewel Madame my lordes worthy mother,
Comfort your ſonne, and be ye of good chere.
Take all a worth, for it wil be no nother.
Farewell my doughter Katherine late the fere,
To prince Arthur myne owne chyld ſo dere,
It booteth not for me to wepe or cry,
Pray for my ſoule, for lo now here I ly.
Adew lord Henry my louyng ſonne adew.
Our lorde encreaſe your honour and eſtate,
Adew my doughter Mary bright of hew,
God make you vertuous wyſe and fortunate.
Adew ſweete hart my litle doughter Kate,
Thou ſhalt ſwete babe ſuche is thy deſteny,
Thy mother neuer know, for lo now here I ly.
Lady Cicyly Anne and Katheryne,
Farewel my welbeloved ſiſters three,
O lady Briget other ſiſter myne,
Lo here the ende of worldly vanitee.
Now well are ye that earthly foly flee,
And heuenly thynges loue and magnify,
Farewell and pray for me, for lo now here I ly.
A dew my lordes, a dew my ladies all,
A dew my faithful ſeruauntes euerych one,
A dew my commons whom I neuer ſhall,
See in this world wherfore to the alone,
Immortal god verely three and one,
I me commende Thy infinite mercy,
Shew to thy ſeruant, for lo now here I ly.

Certain meters in Engliſh written by maſter Thomas More in hys youth for the boke of fortune, and cauſed them to be printed in the begynnyng of that boke.

The wordes of Fortune to the people.

MINE high eſtate power and auctoritie,
If ye ne know, enſerche and ye ſhall ſpye,
That richeſſe, worſhip, welth, and dignitie,
Joy, reſt, and peace, and all thyng fynally,
That any pleaſure or profit may come by,
To mannes comfort, ayde, and ſuſtinaunce,
Is all at my deuyſe and ordinaunce.

Without

Without my fauour there is nothyng wonne.
Many a matter haue I brought at laſt,
To good concluſion, that fondly was begonne
And many a purpoſe, bounden ſore and faſt
With wiſe prouiſion, I haue ouercaſt.
Without good happe there may no wit ſuffiſe.
Better is to be fortunate than wyſe.
And therefore hath there ſome men bene or this,
My deadly foes and written many a boke,
To my diſprayſe. And other cauſe there nys,
But for me liſt not frendly on them loke.
Thus lyke the fox they fare that once forſoke,
The pleaſaunt grapes, and gan for to defy them,
Becauſe he lept and yet could not come by them.
But let them write theyr labour is in vayne.
For well ye wote, myrth, honour, and richeſſe,
Much better is than penury and payne.
The nedy wretch that langereth in diſtreſſe,
Without myne helpe is euer comfortleſſe,
A wery burden odious and loth,
To all the world, and eke to him ſelfe both.
But he that by my fauour may aſcende,
To mighty power and excellent degree,
A common wele to gouerne and defende,
O in how bliſt condicion ſtandeth he:
Him ſelf in honour and felicite,
And ouer that, may ſo ther and increaſe,
A region hole in ioyful reſt and peace
Now in this poynt there is no more to ſay,
Eche man hath of him ſelf the gouernaunce
Let euery wight than folowe his owne way,
And he that out of pouertee and miſchaunce,
Liſt for to riſe, and wyn him ſelfe enhaunce,
In wealth and richeſſe, come forth and wayte on me.
And he that wyll be a beggar, let hym be.

THOMAS MORE to them that truſt in Fortune.

THOU that are prowde of honour ſhape or kynne,
That hepeſt vp this wretched worldes treaſure,
Thy fingers ſtirmed with gold, thy tawny ſkynne,
With freſh apparyle garniſhed out of meaſure,
And weneſt to haue fortune at thy pleaſure,
Caſt vp thyne eye, and loke how ſlipper chaunce,
Ludeth her men with chaunge and varyaunce.
Sometyme ſhe loketh as louely fayre and bright,
As goodly Venus mother of Cupyde
She becketh and she inuyeth on euery wight.
But this chere fayned, may not long abide
There cometh a cloude, and farewell all our pryde
Lyke any ſerpent ſhe beginneth to ſwell,
And looketh as fierce as any fury of hell
Yet for all that we brotel men are fayn
So wretched is our nature and ſo blynd
As ſoone as Fortune lyſt to laugh vpon,
With fayre countenaunce and vnfeithful myndc,
To crouche and knele and gape after the wynde,
Not one or twayne but thouſandes in a rout,
Lyke ſwarmyng bees come flickeryng her aboute.
Then as a bayte ſhe bryngeth forth her ware,
Siluer, gold, riche perle, and precious ſtone:
On whiche the maſed people gaſe and ſtare,
And gape therefore, as dogges doe for the bone.
Fortune at them laugheth, and in her trone
Amyd her treaſure and wauerynge rycheſſe,
Prowdly ſhe ſitteth as lady and empreſſe.
Hault by her ſyde doth wery labour ſtand,
Pale fere alſo, and ſorow all bewept,
Diſdayn and hatred on that other hand,
Like reſtleſs watche fro ſlepe with trauayle kept,
His eyes drowſy and lokyng as he ſlept.
Before her ſtandeth daunger and enuy,
Flattery, dyſceyt, miſchiefe and tiranny.
About her commeth all the world to begge.
He aſketh lande, and he to paſſe would bryng,
This toye and that, and all not worth an egge:
He would in loue proſper aboue all thyng.
He kneeleth downe and would be made a kyng.
He forceth not ſo he may money haue,
Though all the worlde accompt hym for a knaue.
Lo thus ye ſee diuers heddes, diuers wittes
Fortune alone as diuers as they all,
Vnſtable here and there among them flitteth.
And at auenture downe her giftes fall,
Catch who ſo may ſhe throweth great and ſmall
Not to all men, as commeth ſonne or dewe,
But for the moſt part, all among a fewe.
And yet her brotell giftes long may not laſt
He that ſhe gaue them, loketh prowde and hye.
She whirleth about and plucketh away as faſt,
And geueth them to an other by and by.
And thus from man to man continually,
She vſeth to geue and take, and ſtyll toſſe,
One man to wynnyng of an others loſſe.
And when ſhe robbeth one, down goth his pryde.
He wepeth and wayleth and curſeth her full ſore.
But he that receiueth it, on that other ſyde,
Is glad, and bleſſeth her often tymes therefore.
But in a whyle when ſhe loueth hym no more,
She glydeth from hym, and her giftes to.
And he her curſeth, as other fooles do,
Alas the folyſh people can not ceaſe,
Ne voyd her trayne, tyll they the harme do feele.
About her alway, buſely they preace.
But lord how he doth thynk hym ſelf full wele.
That may ſet once his hande vppon her whele.
He holdeth faſt: but vpward as he flieth,
She whippeth her whele about, and there he lyeth.
Thus fell Julius from his mighty power
Thus fell Darius the worthy kyng of Perſe.
Thus fell Alexander the great conquerour.
Thus many mo then I may well reherſe,
Thus double fortune, when ſhe lyſt reuerſe
Her ſlipper fauour fro them that in her truſt,
She fleeth her wey and eyeth them in the duſt.
She ſodeynly enhaunceth them aloft.
And ſodeynly miſchieueth all the flocke.
The head that late lay eaſily and full ſoft,
In ſtede of pylows lyeth after on the blocke
And yet alas the moſt cruell proude mocke:
The deynty mowth that ladyes kiſſed haue,
She bryngeth in the caſe to kyſſe a knaue.
In chaungyng of her courſe, the chaunge ſhewth this,
Vp ſtarteth a knaue, and downe there falth a knight,
The beggar ryche, and the ryche man pore is.
Hatred is turned to loue, loue to deſpyght.
Thus is her ſport, thus proueth ſhe her myght
Great boſte ſhe maketh yt one be by her power,
Welthy and wretched both within an howre.
Pouertee that of her giftes wyl nothing take,
Wyth mery chere, looketh vppon the prece,
And ſeeth how fortunes houſhold goeth to wrake.
Fait by her ſtandeth the wyſe Socrates.
Arriſtippus, Pythagoras, and many a leſe.
Of olde philoſophers. And eke agaynſt the ſonne
Bekyth him poore Diogenes in his tonne.
With her is Byas, whoſe countrey lackt defence,
And whylom of their foes ſtode ſo in dout,
That eche man haſtely gan to cary thence,
And aſked hym why he nought caryed out.
I bere quod he all myne with me about:
Wiſedom he ment, not fortunes brotle fees.
For nought he counted his that he might leeſe.
Heraclitus eke, lyſt felowſhip to kepe
With glad pouertee, Democritus alſo:
Of which the fyrſt can neuer ceaſe but wepe,
To ſee how thick the buſyed people go,
With labour great to purchaſe care and wo.
That other laugheth to ſee the fooliſh apes,
Howe earneſtly they walk about theyr capes.
Of this poore ſect, it is comen vſage,
Onely to take that nature may ſuſtayne,
Baniſhing cleane all other ſurpluſage,
They be content, and of nothyng complayne.
No nygarde eke is of his good ſo fayne.
But they more pleaſure haue a thouſande fold,
The ſecrete draughtes of nature to beholde
Set fortunes ſeruauntes by them and ye will,
That one is free, that other euer thrall,
That one content, that other neuer full
That one in ſurety, that other lyke to fall
Who lyſt to aduiſe them bothe, parceyue he ſhall,
As great difference betweene them as we ſee,
Betwixte wretchednes and felicite

Nowe

Nowe haue I ſhewed you bothe: theſe whiche ye lyſt,
Stately fortune, or humble pouertee.
That is to ſay, nowe lyeth it in your fyſt,
To take here bondage, or free libertee.
But in thys poynte and ye do alter me,
Draw you to fortune, and labour her to pleaſe,
If that ye thynke your ſelfe to well at eaſe.
And fyrſt vppon the louely ſhal ſhe ſmile,
And frendly on the caſt her wandering eyes,
Embrace the in her armes, and for a whyle,
Put the and kepe the in a fooles paradiſe:
And foorth with all what ſo thou lyſt deuiſe,
She wyll the graunt it liberally parhappes:
But for all that beware of after clappes.
Recken you neuer of her fauoure ſure:
Ye may in clowds as eaſily trace an hare,
Or in drye lande cauſe fiſhes to endure,
And make the burnyng fyre his heate to ſpare,
And all thys worlde in compace to fortare,
As her to make by craft or engine ſtable,
That of her nature is euer variable.
Serue her day and nyght as reuerently,
Vppon thy knees as any ſeruaunt may,
And in concluſion, that thou ſhalt winne thereby
Shall not be worth thy ſervyce I dare ſay.
And looke yet what ſhe geueth the to day,
With labour wonne ſhe ſhall happly to morow
Plucke it agayne out of thyne hande with ſorow.
Wherefore yf thou in ſuretye lyſt to ſtande,
Take pouerties parte and let prowde fortune go,
Receyue nothyng that commeth from her hande.
Loue maner and vertue: they be onely tho.
Whiche double fortune may not take the fro.
Then mayſt thou boldly defye her turnyng chaunce:
She can the neyther hynder nor auaunce.
But and thou wylt nedes med'e with her treaſure,
Truſt not therein, and ſpende it liberally.
Beare the not proude, nor take not out of meaſure.
Bylde not thyne houſe on heyth vp in the ſkye.
None falleth farre, but he that climbeth hye,
Remember nature ſent the hyther bare,
The gyftes of fortune count them borowed ware.

THOMAS MORE to them that ſeke Fortune.

WHO ſo delyteth to prouen and aſſay,
Of waveryng fortune the vncertayne lot,
If that the aunſwere pleaſe you not alway,
Blame ye not me: for I commaunde you not,
Fortune to truſt, and eke full well ye wot,
I haue of her no bryde in my fiſt,
She renneth looſe, and turneth where ſhe lyſt.
The rollyng dyſe in whome your lucke doth ſtande,
With whoſe vnhappy chaunce ye be ſo wroth,
Ye knowe your ſelfe came neuer in myne hande.
Lo in this ponde be fyſhe and frogges both.
Caſt in your nette: but be you mete or lothe,
Hold you content as fortune lyſt aſſyne
For it is your owne fiſhyng and not myne.
And though in one chaunce fortune you offend,
Grudge not there at, but beare a mery face.
In many an other ſhe ſhall it amende.
There is no manne ſo farre out of her grace,
But he ſometyme hath comfort and ſolace:
Ne none agayne ſo farre foorth in her fauour,
That is full ſatisfyed with her behauiour.
Fortune is ſtately, ſolemne, prowde, and hye:
And rycheſſe geueth, to haue ſeruyce therefore.
The nedy begger catcheth an halfpeny:
Some manne a thouſande pounde, ſome leſſe ſome more.
But for all that ſhe kepeth euer in ſtore,
From euery manne ſome parcell of his wyll,
That he may pray therfore and ſerue her ſtyll.
Some manne hath good, but chyldren hath he none.
Some man hath both, but he can get none health.
Some hath al thre, but vp to honours trone,
Can he not crepe, by no maner of ſteith.
To ſome ſhe ſendeth, children, ryches, welthe,
Honour, woorſhyp, and reuerence all hys lyfe.
But yet ſhe pyncheth hym with a ſhrewde wyfe.
Then for aſmuch as it is fortunes guyſe,
To graunt no manne all thyng that he wyll axe,
But as her ſelfe lyſt order and deuyſe,
Doth euery manne his parte diuide and tax,
I counſayle you eche one truſſe vp your packes,
And take no thyng at all, or be content,
With ſuche rewarde as fortune hath you ſent.
All thynges in this boke that ye ſhall rede,
Doe as ye lyſt, there ſhall no manne you bynde,
Them to beleue, as ſurely as your crede.
But notwithſtandyng certes in my mynde,
I durſt well ſwere, as true ye ſhall them fynde,
In euery poynt eche anſwere by and by,
As are the iudgementes of aſtronomye.

The Deſcripcion of RICHARD the thirde.

RICHARDE the third ſonne, of whom we nowe entreate, was in witte and courage egall with either of them, in bodye and proweſſe farre vnder them bothe, little of ſtature, ill fetured of limmes, croke backed, his left ſhoulder much higher than his right, hard fauoured of viſage, and ſuch as is in ſtates called warlye, in other menne otherwyſe, he was malicious, wrathfull, enuious, and from afore his birth, euer frowarde. It is for trouth reported, that the duches his mother had ſo much a doe in her trauaile, that ſhee coulde not bee deliuered of hym vncutte: and that hee came into the worlde with the feete forwarde, as menne bee borne outwarde, and (as the fame runneth) alſo not vntothed, whither menne of hatred reporte abo e the trouthe, or elles that nature chaunged her courſe in hys beginninge, whiche in the courſe of his lyfe many thinges vnnaturallye committed. None euill captaine was hee in the warre, as to whiche his diſpoſicion was more mete y then for peace. Sundrye victories hadde hee, and ſommetime ouerthrowes, but neuer in defaulte as for his owne perſone, either of hardineſſe or polytike order, free was hee called of dyſpence, and ſommewhat aboue hys power liberall, with large giftes hee get him vnſtedfaſte frendeſhippe, for whiche hee was fain to pil and ſpoyle in other places, and get him ſtedfaſt hatred. Hee was cloſe and ſecrete, a deepe diſſimuler, lowlye of countenaunce, arrogant of heart, outwardly coumpinable where he inwardely hated, not letting to kiſſe whome hee thoughte to kyll, dispitious and cruell, not for euill will alway, but after for ambicion, and either for the ſuretie or encreaſe of his eſtate. Frende and foo was muche what indifferent, where his aduauntage grew, he ſpared no mans deathe, whoſe life withſtoode his purpoſe. He ſlewe with his owne handes king Henry the ſixt, being priſoner in the Tower, as menne conſtantly ſaye, and that without commaundement or knoweledge of the king, whiche woulde vndoubtedly yf he had entended that thinge, haue appointed that bootcherly office, to ſome other then his owne borne brother.

Somme wiſe menne alſo weene, that his drift couertly conuayde, lacked not in helping forth his brother of Clarence to his death: whiche hee reſiſted openly, howbeit ſomwhat (as menne deme) more faintly then he that wer hartely minded to his welth. And they that thus deme, think that he long time in king Edwardes life, forethought to be king in that caſe the king his brother (whoſe life hee looked that euil dyete ſhoulde ſhorten) ſhoulde happen to deceaſe (as in dede he did, while his children wer yonge. And ther deme, that for thys intente he was gladde of his brothers death the duke of Clarence, whoſe life muſt nedes haue hindered hym ſo entendynge, whither the ſame duke of Clarence hadde kepte him true to his nephew the yonge king, or enterpriſed to be kyng himſelfe. But of al this pointe, is there no certaintie, and whoſo diuineth vppon conjectures, maye as well ſhote too farre as too ſhort. Howbeit this haue I by credible information learned, that the ſelfe nighte in whiche kynge Edwarde died, one Myſtlebrooke longe ere mornynge, came in greate haſte to the houſe of one Pottyer dwellyng in Reddecroſſe ſtrete without Cripulgate: and when he was with haſtye rappyng quickly letten in, hee ſhewed vnto Pottyer that kynge Edwarde was departed. By my trouthe manne quod Pottier then wyll my mayſter the duke of Glouceſter bee kynge. What cauſe hee hadde ſo to thynke harde it is to ſaye, whyther hee being toward him, anye thynge knewe that bee ſuche hynge purpoſed, or otherwyſe wyſe had anye inkelynge thereof: for hee was not likelye to ſpeake it of noughte.

But nowe to returne to the courſe of this hyſtorye, were it that the duke of Gloucester hadde of old forcminded this concluſion, or was nowe at erſte thereunto moued, and putte in hope by the occaſion of the tender age of the younge princes, his nephues (as opportunitye and lykelyhoode of ſpede, putteth a manne in courage of that hee neuer entended) certayn is it that hee contriued theyr deſtruccion, with the vſurpacion of the regal dignitye vppon hymſelfe. And for as muche as hee well wiſte and holpe to mayntayn, a long continued grudge and hearte brennynge betwene the quenes kinred and the kinges blood eyther partye enuying others authoritye, he nowe thought that their deuiſion ſhoulde bee (as it was in dede) a fortherlye begynnynge to the purſuite of his intente, and a ſure ground for the foundacion of al his building yf he might firſte vnder the pretext of reuengynge of olde diſpleaſure, abuſe the anger and ygnoraunce of the tone partie, to the deſtruccion of the tother: and then wynne to his purpoſe as manye as he couldc: and thoſe that coulde not be wonne, myght be loſte ere they looked therefore. For of one thynge was hee certayne, that if his entente were perceiued, he ſhoud ſoone haue made peace betwene the bothe parties, with his owne bloude.

Kynge Edwarde in his life, albeit that this diſcencion betwene hys frendes ſommewhat yrked hym: yet in his good health he ſommewhat the leſſe regarded it, becauſe hee thought whatſoeuer buſines ſhoulde falle betwene them, hymſelfe ſhould alwaye bee hable to rule bothe the parties.

But in his laſt ſickneſſe, when hee receiued his natural ſtrengthe ſoo ſore enfeebled, that hee dyſpayred all recouerye, then hee conſyderynge the youthe of his chyldren, albeit hee nothynge leſſe miſtruſted then that that happened, yet well forſeynge that manye harmes myghte growe by theyr debate, whyle the youth of hys children ſhoulde lacke diſcrecion of themſelf and good counſayle, of their frendes, of whiche either party ſhold counſayle for their owne commodity and rather by pleaſaunte aduyſe too wynne themſelfe fauour, then by profitable admoniſemente to do the children good, he called ſome of them before him that were at variaunce, and in eſpecyall the lorde marques Dorſette the quenes ſonne by her fyrſte houſebande, and Richarde the lorde Haſtynges, a noble man, than lorde chaumberlayne agayne whome the quene ſpecially grudged, for the great fauoure the kyng bare hym, and alſo for that ſhee thoughte hym ſecrete ye familyer with the kynge in wanton coumpanye. Her kynred alſo bare hym ſore, as well for that the kynge hadde made hym captayne of Calyce (whiche office the lorde Ryuers, brother to the quene claimed of the kinges former promyſe as for diuerſe other great giftes whiche hee receyued, that they loked for. When theſe lordes with diuerſe other of bothe the parties were comme in preſence, the kynge liſtinge vppe himſelfe and vnderſette with pillowes, as it is reported on this wyſe ſayd vnto them, My lordes, my dere kinſmenne and alies, in what plighte I lye you ſee, and I feele. By whiche the leſſe whyle I looke to lyue with you, the more depelye am I moued to care in what caſe I leaue you, for ſuch as I leaue you, ſuche bee my children lyke to fynde you. Whiche if they ſhoulde (that Godde forbydde) fynde you at varyaunce, myght happe to fall themſelfe at warre ere their diſcrecion woulde ſerue to ſette you at peace. Ye ſe their youthe, of whiche I recken the onely ſurete to reſte in youre concord, For it ſuffiſeth not that al you loue them, yf eche of you hate other, If they were menne, your faithfulneſſe happely woulde ſuffiſe. But childehood muſt be maintained by mens authoritye, and flipper youth vnderpropped with elder counſayle, which neither they can haue, but ye geue it, nor ye geue it, yf ye gree not. For wher eche laboureth to breake that the other maketh, and for hatred of eth of others [illegible] nedes bee long ere anye good concluſion goe forwarde. And alſo while either partye laboureth to be chiefe, flattery ſhall haue more place then plaine and faithfull aduyſe, of whyche muſte needes enſue the euyll bringing vppe of the prynce, whoſe mynd in tender youth infect, ſhal redily fal to miſchief and riot, and drawe down with this noble reaime to ruine, but if grace turn him to wiſdom: which if God ſend, then thei that by euill menes before pleaſed him beſt, ſhal after fal fartheſt out of fauour, ſo that euer at length euil driftes dreue to nought, and good plain wayes proſper. Great variaunce hath ther long bene betwene you, not alway for great cauſes. Sometime a thing right well intended, our miſconſtruccion turneth vnto worſe or a ſmal diſpleaſure done vs, eyther our owne affeccion or euil tongues agreueth. But this wote I well ye neuer had ſo great cauſe of hatred, as ye haue of lone. That we be all men, that we be chriſten men, this ſhal I leaue for preachers to tel you (and yet I wote nere whither any preachers wordes ought more to moue you, then his that is by and by gooying to the place that thei shal preache of.) But this ſhal I deſire you to remember, that the one parte of you is of my bloode, the other of myne alies, and eche of yow with other, eyther of kinred or affinitie, whiche ſpirytuall kynred of affynyty, if the ſacramentes of Chriſtes churche, beare that weyghte with vs that woulde Godde ther did, ſhoulde no leſſe moue vs to charitye, then the reſpecte of fleſhlye conſanguinitye. Oure Lorde forbydde, that you loue together the worſe, for the ſelfe cauſe that you ought to lone the better. And yet that happeneth. And no where ſynde wee ſo deadlye debate, as amonge them, whyche by nature and lawe moſte oughte to agree together. Suche a peſtilente ſerpente is ambicion and deſyre of vaine glorye and ſouerauntye, whiche amonge ſtates where he once entreth crepeth foorth ſo farre, tyll with deuiſion and variaunce hee turneth all to miſchiefe. Firſte longing to be nexte the beſt, afterwarde egall with the beſte, and at laſte chiefe and aboue the beſte. Of which immoderate appetite of woorſhip, and thereby of debate and diſſencion what loſſe, what ſorowe, what trouble hathe within theſe fewe yeares growen in this realme, I praye Godde as well forgeate as wee well remember.

Whiche thinges yf I could as well haue foreſene, as I haue with my more payne then pleaſure proued, by Goddes bleſſed Ladie (that was euer his othe) I woulde neuer haue won the courteſye of mennes knees, with the loſſe of ſoo many heades. But ſithen thynges paſſed cannot be gaine called, muche oughte wee the more beware, by what occaſion we haue taken ſoo greate harte afore, that we eſteſoones fal not in that occaſion agayne. Nowe be thoſe griefes paſſed, and all is (Godde be thanked) quiete, and likelie righte well to proſper in wealthful peace vnder youre coſeyns my children, if Godde lende them life and you loue. Of whyche twoo thinges, the leſſe loſſe wer they by whome thoughe Godde dyddie hys pleaſure, yet ſhoulde the reaime alway finde kinges and paraduenture as good kinges. But yf you among youre ſelfe in a childes reygne fall at debate, many a good man ſhal perish and happely he too, and ye too, ere thys land finde peace again. Wherfore in theſe laſt wordes that euer I looke to ſpeak with you: I exhort you and require you al, for the loue that you haue euer borne to me, for the loue that I haue euer born to you, for the loue that our Lord beareth to vs al, from this time forwarde, all griefes forgotten, eche of you loue other. Whiche I verelye truſte you will, if ye any thing earthly regard, either Godde or your king, affinitie or kinred, this realme, your owne countrey, or your owne ſurety. And therewithal the king [illegible]nger enduring to ſitte vp, laide him down on his [illegible]t ſide, his face towarde them: and none was there preſent that coulde refrain from weping. But the lordes recomforting him with as good wordes as they could, and anſwering for the time as thei thought to ſtand with his pleaſure, there in his preſence (as by their wordes appered) ech forgaue other, and ioyned their hands together, when (as it after appeared by their dedes) their hearts wer far a ſonder. As ſone as the king was departed, the noble prince his ſonne drew toward London, which at the time of his deceaſe, kept his houſhold at Ludlow in Wales. Which countrey being far of from the law and recourſe to iuſtice, was begon to be farre out of good wyll and waxen wild, robbers and riuers walking at libertie vncorrected. And for this encheaſon the prince was in the life of his father sente thither, to the end that the authoritie of his presence, should refraine euill disposed parsons fro the boldnes of their formar outerages, to the gouernaunce and ordering of this yong prince at his sending thyther, was there appointed Sir Antony Woduile lord Riuers and brother vnto the quene, a right honourable man, as valiaunte of hande as politike in counsayle. Adioyned wer there vnto him other of the same partie, and in effect euery one as he was nerest of kin vnto the quene, so was planted next about the prince. That drifte by the quene not vnwisely deuised, whereby her bloode might ite of youth be rooted in the princes fauor, the duke of Gloucester turned vnto their destruccion, and vpon that grounde set the foundacion of all his vnhappy building. For whom soeuer he perceiued, either at variance with them, or bearing himself their fauor, hee brake vnto them, some by mouth, som by writing and secret messengers, that it neyther was reason nor in any wise to be suffered, that the yong king their master and kinsmanne, shoold bee in the handes and custodye of his mothers kinred, sequestred in maner from theyr compani and attendance, of which euery one ought him as faithful service as they, and manye of them far more honorable part of kin then his mothers side: whose blood (quod he sauing the kinges pleasure, was ful vnmete y to be matched with his: whiche nowe to be as who say removed from the kyng, and the lesse noble to be left aboute him, is (quod he) neither honorable to hys magestie, nor vnto vs, and also to his grace no surety to haue the mightiest of his frendes from h m, and vnto vs no litt e ieopardy, to suffer our welproued enemyes, to grow in ouergret authorit ewith the prince in youth, namely which is aighte of beliefe and sone perswaded Ye remember I trow king Edward himselfe, albe t he was a manne of age and of discrecion, yet was he in manye thynges ruled by the bende, more then stode either with his honour, or our profite, or with the commoditie of any manne els, except onely the immoderate aduauncement of them selfe. Whiche wh ther they sorer thirsted after their owne weale, or our woe, it wer hard I wene to gesse. And if some folkes frendship had not holden better place with the king, then any respect of kinred, thei might peraduenture easily haue be trapped and brought to confusion somme of vs ere this. Why not as easily as they haue done some other alreadye, as neere of his royal bloode as we. But our Lord hath wrought his wi , and thanke be to his grace that peril is passe. Howe be it as great is growing, yf wee suffer this yonge kyng in oure enemyes hande, whiche without his wyttyng, might abuse the name of his commaundement, to ani of our vndoing, which thyng God and good prouision forbyd. Of w ich good prouision none of us hath any th ng the lesse neede, for the late made attonemente, in whiche the kinges pleasure hadde more place then the parties willes. Nor none of vs I beleue is so vnwyse, ouersone to truste a newe frende made of an olde foe, or to t ink that an houerly kindnes, sodainely contract in one houre continued, yet scant a fortnight, shold be deper setled in their stomackes: then a long accustomed malice many yeres rooted

With these wordes and writynges and suche other, the duke of Gloucester sone set a fyre, them that were of themselfe ethe to kindle, and in especial twayne, Edwarde duke of Buckingham, and Richarde lorde Hastinges and chaumberlayn, both men of honour and of great power. The tone by longe succession from his ancestrie, the tother by his office and the kinges fauor. These two not bearing eche to other so muche loue, as hatred bothe vnto the quenes parte: in this poynte accorded together wyth the duke of Gloucester, that they woide vtterlye amoue fro the kynges companye, all his mothers frendes, vnder the name of their enemyes. Vpon this concluded, the duke of Gloucester vnderstandyng, that the lordes whiche at that tyme were aboute the kyng, entended to bryng him vppe to his coronacion, accompanied with suc e power of theyr frendes, that it shouide bee harde for hym to brynge his purpose to passe, without the gathering and great assemble of people and in maner of open warre, whereof the ende he wille was doubtuous, and in wh ch the kyng being on their side, his part should haue t e face and name of a rebellion: he secretly therefore by diuers meanes, caused the quene to be perswaded and brought in the mynd, that it neither wer nede, and also shold be ieopardous, the k ng to come vp strong. For whereas nowe euery lorde loued other, and none other thing studyed vppon, but aboute the coronacion and honoure of the king: at the lordes of her kinred shold assemble in the kinges name muche people, thei should geue the lordes atwixte whome and them hadde bene sommetyme debate, to feare and suspecte, leste they shoulde gather thys people, not for the kynges saueguarde whome no manne enpugned, but for theyr destruccion, hauyng more regarde to their o e variaunce, then their newe atonement. For whiche cause thei sho lde assemb e on the other partie muche people agayne for their defence, whose power he wyste wel farre stretched. And thus should all the reaime fal on a rore And of al the harte that therof should ensue, which was likely not to be litle, and the most harme there like to fal wher the left would, all the worlde woulde put her and her kinred in the wyght, and say that shee had v wyfelye and vntrewlye a o, broken the amit e and peace that the kyng her husband so prudente ye made, betwene hys kinne and hers in his death bed, and whiche the other party faithfully obserued.

The quene being in this wise perswaded, suche woorde sente vnto her sonne, and vnto her brother being aboute the kynge, and ouer that the duke of Gloucester hymselfe and o her lordes the chiefe of hys bende, wrote vnto the kynge soo reuerente ye, and to the queenes frendes, there too louyngelye, that they nothynge earthelye mystrustynge, broughte the kynge vppe in greate haste, not in good spede, with a sober coompanye. Nowe was the king in his waye to London gone, from Northampton, when these dukes of G oucester and Buckyngham came thither. Where remained behynd, the lorde Ryuers the kynges vncle, entendyng on the morowe to folow the kynge, and bee with hym at Stonye Stratford miles thence, earely or hee departed. So was there made that nyghte muche frendely chere betweene these dukes and the lorde Riuers a greate while. But incontinente after that they were oppenlye with greate courtesye departed, and the lorde Riuers lodged, the dukes secretelye with a fewe of their moste priuye frendes, sette them downe in counsfiyse, wherin they spent a great parte of the nyght. And at their risinge in the dawnyng of the day, thei sent about priuely to their seruantes in their innes and lodgynges about, geuinge them commaundemente to make them selfe shortely readye, for their lordes wer to horseback ward. Vpon whiche messages, manye of their folke were attendaunt, when manye of the lorde Riuers seruantes were vnreadye. Nowe hadde these dukes taken also into their custodye the kayes of the inne, that none shoulde passe foorth without theyr l'eence.

And ouer this in the hyghe waye towarde Stonye Stratforde wher the kynge laye, they hadde beaforwea certayne of theyr folke, that shoulde sende backe agayne, and compel to retourne, anye manne that were gotten oute of Northampton toward Stonye Stratforde, tyll they should geue other yeence. For as muche as the dukes themselfe entended for the shewe of theire diligence, to bee the fyrste that shoulde that daye arriende vppon the kynges highnesse oute of that towne: this bare they to ke in hande. But when the lorde Ryuers vnderstode the gates closed, and the wayes on euerye side besette, neyther hys seruauntes nor hymselfe suffered to go oute, parceiuyng wel so greate a thyng without his knowleage not begun for noughte, comparyng this maner present with this last nyghtes chere, in so few houres so gret a chaange maruey.ously marked. How be it sithe hee couide not geat awaye, and keepe himselfe close, hee woulde not, leste he shoulde seeme to hyde himselfe for some secret feare of hys owne fauite, whereof he saw no such cause in hym self: he determined vppon the suretie of his own conscience, to goe boldelye to them, and inquire what this matter myghte meane. Whome as soone as they sawe, they beganne to quarrel with hym, and saye, that hee intended to sette diffaunce

beetweene the kynge and them, and to brynge them to confuſion, but it ſhoulde not lye in hys power. And when hee beganne (as hee was a very weal ſpoken manne) in goodly wiſe to excuſe himſelf, they taryed not the ende of his aunſwere, but ſhortely tooke him and putte him in warde, and that done, foorthwyth wente to horſebacke, and tooke the waye to Stonye Stratforde. Where they founde the kinge with his compane readye to leape on horſebacke, and departe forwarde, to leaue that lodging for them, becauſe it was to ſtreighte for bothe coumpanies. And as ſone as they came in his preſence, they alighte adowne with all their compane aboute them. To whome the duke of Buckingham ſaide, goe afore gentlemenne and yeomen, kepe youre rowmes. And thus in goodly arraye, thei came to the kinge, and on theire knees in very humble wiſe, ſalued his grace; whiche receyued them in very ioyous and amiable maner, nothinge earthlye knowing nor miſtruſtinge as yet. But euen by and by in his preſence, they piked a quarell to the lorde Richard Graye, the kynges other brother by his mother, ſayinge that hee with the lorde marques his brother and the lorde Riuers his vncle, hadde coumpaſſed to raie the kinge and the realme, and to ſette variaunce among the ſtates, and to ſubdewe and deſtroye the noble blood of the realm. Toward the accoumpliſhinge whereof, they ſayde that the lorde Marques hadde entered into the Tower of London, and thence taken out the kinges treaſor, and ſent manie to the ſea. All whiche thinge theſe dukes wiſte well were done for good purpoſes and neceſſari by the whole counſaile at London, ſauing that ſommewhat thei muſt ... Vnto whiche woordes, the king aunſwered, what my brother Marques hath done I cannot faie. But in good faith I dare well aunſwere for myne vncle Riuers and my brother here, that thei be innocent of any ſuch matters. Ye my liege quod the duke of Buckingham thei haue kepte the re dealing in theſe matters farre fro the knowledge of your good grace. And foorthwith thei arreſted the lord Richarde and Sir Thomas Wa... knighte, in the kinges preſence, and broughte the king and al backe vnto Northampton, where they tooke againe further counſaile. And there they ſent awaie from the kinge whom it pleaſed them, and fette newe ſeruantes aboute him, ſuche as lyked better them than him. At whiche dealinge hee wepte and was nothing contente, but it booted not. And at dyner the duke of Gloucester ſente a diſhe from his owne table to the lord Riuers, prayinge him to bee of good chere, all ſhould be well inough. And he thanked the duke, and prayed the meſſenger to beare it to his nephewe the lorde Richard with the ſame meſſage for his comfort, who he thought had more nede of coumfort, as one to whom ſuch aduerſitie was ſtraunge. But himſelf had been al his dayes in vre therewith, and therfore coulde beare it the better. But for al this coumfortable courteſye of the duke of Gloucester he ſent the lord Riuers and the lorde Richarde with Sir Thomas Vaughan into the Northe countrey into diuers places to priſon, and afterward al to Pomfrait, where they were in concluſion beheaded.

A letter written with a cole by Sir THOMAS MORE to hys doughter maiſtres MARGARET ROPER, within a whyle after he was priſoner in the Towre.

MYNE own good doughter, our lorde be thanked I am in good healthe of bodye, and in good quiet of minde: and of worldly thynges I no more deſyer then I haue. I beſeche hym make you all mery in the hope of heauen. And ſuch thynges as I ſomewhat longed to take with you al, concerning the worlde to come, our Lorde put theim into your myndes, as I truſte he dothe and better to by hys holy ſpirite: who bleſſe you and preſerue you all Written wyth a cole by your tender louing father, who in hys pore prayers forgetteth none of you all nor your babes, nor your nurſes, nor your good huſbandes, nor your good huſbandes ſhrewde wyues, nor your fathers ſhrewde wyfe neither, nor our other frendes. And thus fare ye hartely well for lacke of paper.

THOMAS MORE, knight.

Two ſhort ballettes which Sir THOMAS MORE made for hys paſtime while he was priſoner in the Tower of London.

LEWYS the loſt louer.

FEY flatering fortune, loke thou neuer ſo fayre,
Or neuer ſo pleſantly begin to ſmile,
As though thou wouldſt my ruine all repayre,
During my life thou ſhalt me not begile.
Truſt ſhall I God, to entre in a while.
Hys hauen or heauen ſure and vniforme.
Euer after thy calme, loke I for a ſtorme.

DAUY the dycer.

LONG was I lady Lucke your ſeruing man,
And now haue loſt agayne all that I gat,
Wherfore whan I thinke on you nowe and than,
And in my mynde remember this and that,
Ye may not blame me though I beſhrew your cat,
But in fayth I bleſſe you agayne a thouſand times,
For lending me now ſome layſure to make rymes.

At the ſame time with Sir Thomas More lived Skelton, the poet laureate of Henry VIII. from whoſe works it ſeems proper to inſert a few ſtanzas, though he cannot be ſaid to have attained great elegance of language.

The prologue to the Bouge of Courte.

IN Autumpne whan the ſonne in vyrgyne
By radyaunce hete enryped hath our corne
Whan Luna full of mutabylyte
As Emperes the dyademe hath worne
Of our pole artyke, ſmylynge halfe in ſcorne
At our folyſ and our vnſtedfaſtneſſe
I met me whan Mars to warre hym dyd dreſs,
Inſa ynge to mynde the greate auctoryte
Of poetes olde, whome full craftely
Vnder as couerte termes as couldе be
Can touche a trouth, and cloke ſubtylly
With freſhe vtteraunce ful ſentencyouſly
Dyuerſe in ſtyle ſome ſpared not vyce to wryte
Some of mortalitie nobly dyd endyte
Whereby I rede, theyr renome and theyr fame
Maye neuer dye, but euermore endure
I was ſore moued to a forſe the ſame
But ignoraunce full ſoone dyde me dyſcure
And ſhewed that in this arte I was not ſure
For to inuamine ſhe ſayd I was to dulle
Aduyſynge me my penne awaye to pulle
And not to wryte, for he ſo wyll atteyne
Excedyng ferther than his connynge is
His heed maye be harde, but feble is brayne
Yet haue I knowen ſuche er this
But of reproche ſurely he maye not mys
That lymmeth hyer than he may forynge haue
What and he flyde downe, who ſhall him ſaue
Thus vp and downe my mynde was drawen and caſt
That I ne wyſte what to do was beſte
So ſore enwered that I was at the laſte
Enforſed to ſlepe, and for to take ſome reſte
And to lye downe as ſoone as I my dreſte
At Harwyche porte ſlumbrynge as I laye
In myne hoſtes houſe called powers keye

Of the wits that flouriſhed in the reign of Henry VIII none has been more frequently celebrated than the ea of Surry; and this hiſtory would therefore have been imperfect without ſome ſpecimens of his works, which yet it is not eaſy to diſtinguiſh from thoſe of Si Wyat and others, with which they are confounded in the edition that has fallen into my hands. The three firſt are, I believe, Surry's; the reſt, being of the ſame age, are ſelected, ſome as examples of different meaſures, and one as the oldeſt compoſition which I have found in blank verſe.

Deſcription of Spring, wherein eche thing renewes, ſave only the lover.

THE ſoote ſeaſon that bud, and bloome fourth brynges,
With grene hath cladde the hyll, and eke the vale,
The Nightingal. with fethers new ſhe ſinges;
The turtle to her mate hath told her tale:

Somer is come, for every ſpray now ſpringes
The hart hath hunge hys olde head on the pale,
The bucke in brake his winter coate he flynges;
The fiſhes flete with newe repayred ſcale:
The adder all her ſlough away ſhe flynges,
The ſwift ſwallow purſueth the flyes ſmalle;
The buſy bee her honey how ſhe mynges;
Winter is worne that was the floures bale.
And thus I ſee among theſe pleaſant thynges
Eche care decayes, and yet my ſorrow ſprynges.

Deſcripcion of the reſtleſs eſtate of a lover.

WHen youth had led me halfe the race,
That Cupides ſcourge had made me ronne;
I looked back to meet the place,
From whence my weary courſe begunne:
And then I ſaw howe my deſyre
Miſguiding me had led the waye,
Myne eyne to greedy of theyre hyre,
Had made me loſe a better prey.
For when in ſighes I ſpent the day,
And could not cloake my griefe with game;
The boyling ſmoke dyd ſtill bewray,
The preſent heat of ſecret flame:
And when laſt reares do bayne my breaſt,
Where love his pleaſant traynes hath ſown,
Her beauty hath the traytes oppreſt,
Ere that the buddes were ſpronge and blowne.
And when myne eyen dyd ſtill purſue,
The flying chaſe of theyre requeſt;
Theyre greedy looks dyd ott renew,
The hydden wounde within my breſte
Whenevery loke theſe cheekes myght ſtayne,
From dedly pale to glowing red,
By outward ſignes appeared playne,
To her for helpe my hart was fled.
But all to late Love learneth me,
To payne all kynd of Colours new;
To blynd theyre eyes that elſe ſhould ſee
My ſpeckled cheekes with Cupids hew.
And now the covert breſt I clame,
That worſhipt Cupide ſecretely;
And nourſhed hys ſacred flame,
From whence no blaring ſparks do flye.

Deſcripcion of the fickle Affections, Pangs, and Sleightes of Love.

SUCH wayward wayes hath Love, that moſt part in diſcord
Our willes do ſtand, whereby our hartes but ſeldom do accord:
Deceyte is hys delighte, and to begyle and mocke
The ſimple hartes which he doth ſtrike with froward divers ſtroke.
He cauſeth th' one to rage with golden burning darte,
And doth allay with Leaden cold, againe the others harte.
Whoſe gleames of burning fyre and eaſy ſparkes of flame,
In balance of unequal weyght he pondereth by ame
From eaſye ford where I myghte wade and paſs full well,
He me withdrawes and doth me drive, into a deepe dark vell:
And me withholdes where I am calde and offred place,
And wiſes me that my mortal foe I do beſeke of Grace,
He lettes me to purſue a conqueſt welnere wonne
To follow where my paynes were loſt, ere that my ſute begunne.
So by this means I know how ſoon a hart may turne
From warre to peace, from truce to ſtryfe, and ſo againe returne.
I know how to contente my ſelf in others luſt,
Of little ſtuffe unto my ſelf to weave a webbe of truſt.
And how to hyde my harmes with ſole dyſſembling chere,
Whan in my face the painted thoughtes would outwardly appeare.
I know how that the bloud forſakes the face for dred,
And how by ſhame it ſtaynes againe the Chekes with flamyng red:
I know under the Grene, the Serpent how he lurkes:
The hammer of the reſtleſs forge I wote eke how it workes
I know and con by roate the tale that I would tell
But ofte the woordes come fourth awrye of him that loveth well
I know in heate and colde the Lover how he ſhakes,
In ſynging how he doth complayne, in ſleeping how he wakes
To languiſh without ache, ſickeneſſe for to conſume,
A thouſand thynges for to devyſe, reſolvynge of his fume;
And though he lyſte to ſee his Ladyes Grace full ſore
Such pleaſures as deyght hys Eye, do not his helthe reſtore.
I know to ſeke the traſte of my deſyred foe,
And fere to fynde that I do ſeek, but chiefly this I know,
That Lovers muſt transfourme into the thynge beloved,
And live (alas! who would beleve?) with ſprite from Lyfe removed
I knowe in harry ſighes and laughters of the ſpleene,
At once to chaunge my ſtate, my will, and eke my colour clene.
I know how to decreyve my ſelf wythe others helpe,
And how the Lyon chaſtized is, by beatynge of the whelpe.
In ſtandynge nere the fyre, I know how that I freaſe,
Farre of I burne, in bothe I waſte, and ſo my Lyfe I leeſe.
I know how Love doth rage upon a yeylding mynde,
How ſmaile a nete may take and maſe a harte of gentle kynde:
Or elſe with ſeldom ſwete to ſeaſon hepes of gall,
Revived with a glymple of Grace old ſorrowes to let fal.
The hydden traynes I know, and ſecret ſnares of Love,
How ſoone a loke will prynte a thoughte that never may remove
The ſlypper ſtate I know, the ſodein turnes from welthe
The doubtful hope, the certaine woe, and ſure deſpaired health.

A praiſe of his ladie.

GIVE place you ladies and be gone,
Boaſt not your ſelves at all,
For here at hande approcheth one,
Whoſe face will ſtayne you all
The vertue of her lively lookes
Excels the precious ſtone,
I wiſhe to have none other bookes
To reade or look upon.
In eche of her two chriſtall eyes,
Smyleth a naked boy;
It would you all in heart ſuffiſe
To ſee that lampe of joye.
I think nature hath loſt the moulde,
Where ſhe her ſhape did take;
Or elſe I doubte if nature coulde
So fayre a creature make
She may be well comparde
Unto the Phenix kinde,
Whoſe like was never ſeene nor heard,
That any man can fynde.
In lyfe ſhe is Diana chaſt
In truth Penelopey,
In woord and eke in dede ſteadfaſt;
What will you more we ſay:
If all the world were ſought ſo farre,
Who could finde ſuche a wight,
Her beauty twinkleth lyke a ſtarre
Within the froſty night.

The Lover refuſed of his love, embraceth vertue.

MY youthfull yeres are paſt,
My joyfull dayes are gone,
My lyfe it may not laſt,
My grave and I am one.
My Mirth and joyes are fled,
And I a Man in wo,
Deſirous to be ded,
My miſchefe to forgo.

I burne and am a colde,
I freeſe ar eyddes the fyer,
I ſee ſhe doth witho de
That is my honeſt deſyre.
I ſee my helpe at hande,
I ſee my lyfe a ſo,
I ſee where ſhe doth ſtande
That is my deadly fo.
I ſee how ſhe doth ſee,
And yet ſhe wil be blynde,
I ſee in helpyng me,
She ſekes and will not fynde.
I ſee how ſhe doth wrye,
When I begynne to mone,
I ſee when I come nye,
How fayne ſhe would be gone.
I ſee what wi ye more,
She will me glaoy k ..,
And you ſhall ſee therfore
That ſhe ſhall have her will.
I cannot live with ſtones,
It is too hard a foode,
I wil be dead at ones
To do my Lady good.

The Death of ZOROAS, an Egiptian aſtronomer, in the firſt fight that Alexander had with the Perſians.

NOW clatring armes, now raging broyls of warre,
Gan paſſe the noys of dreadfull trumpetts clang,
Shrowded with ſhafts, the heaven with cloude of dartes,
Covered the ayre Againſt full fatted bulles.
As forceth kyndled yre the lyons keene,
Whoſe greedy gutts the gnawing hunger prickes;
So Macedons againſt the Perſians fare,
Now corpſes hyde the purpurde foyle with blood;
Large ſlaughter on eche ſide, but Perſes more,
Moyſt fieldes bebled, theyr heartes and numbers bate,
Fainted while they gave backe, and fa.l to flighte.
The liening Macedon by ſwordes, by gleaves,
By bandes and troupes of footemen, with his garde,
Speedes to Dary, but hym a s mereſt kyn,
Oxate preſeryes with horſemen on a plumpe
Before his carr, that none his charge ſhould give.
Here grunts, here groans, eche where ſtrong youth is ſpent:
Shaking her bloudy hands, Bellone among
The Perſes ſoweth all kind of cruel death:
With throte yent he roares, he eyeth a ong
His entra.es with a launce through gryded quyte,
Hym ſmytes the club, hym wounded farre ſtryking bowe,
And him the ſling, and him the ſh ning ſword;
He dyeth, he is all dead, he pantes, he reſtes.
Right over ſtoode in ſnowwhite armour brave,
The Memphite Zoroas, a cunnyng clarke,
To whom the heaven lay open as his booke;
And in ceeſtiall bodies he could tel.
The moving meeting ight, aſpect, eclips,
And influence, and conſtellations all,
What earthly chaunces would betyde, what yere,
Of p enty ſtorde. what ſigne forewarned death,
How winter geadreth ſnow, what temperature
In the prime tyde doth ſeaſon wel the foyle,
Why ſummer burnes, why a.tumne hath ripe grapes,
Whither the circle quadrate may become,
Whether our tones heavens harmony can yelde
Of four begyns among themſelves how great
Proportion is; what ſway the erryng lightes
Doth lend in courſe gayne that fyrſt movyng heaven;
What, grees one from another diſtant be,
What ſtarr doth lett the northall fyre to rage,
Or h m more mylde what oppoſition makes,
What fyre doth qualifye Mavorſes fyre,
What houſe eche one doth ſeeke, what plannett raignes
Within this heaven ſphere, nor that ſmal. traynges
I ſpeake, whole heaven he cloſeth in his breſt
This ſage then in the ſtarres hath ſpyed the fates
Threatned a m death without delay, and, ſith,
He ſaw he could not fatal order chaange,
Foreward he preſt in battayle, that he might
Mete with the rulers of the Macedons,
Of his right hand deſirous to be ſlain,
The bouldeſt borne, and worthieſt in the fraide;
And as a wight, now wery of his lyfe,
And ſeking death, in fyrſt front of his rage,
Comes de perately to Alexanders face,
At him with dartes one after other throwes,
With reckleſſe wordes and clamour him provokes,
And ſayth, Nectanaks baſtard ſhameful ſtayne
Of mothers bed, why loſeſt thou thy ſtrokes,
Cowardes among, Turn thee to me, in caſe
Manhood there be ſo much left in thy heart,
Come fight with me, that on my helmet weare
Apollo's laurell both for learninges laude,
And eke for martiall praiſe, that in my ſhielde
The ſeven fold Sophie of Minerve contein,
A match more mete, Syr King, then any here.
The noble prince amoved takes ruth upon
The wilful wight, and with ſoft words ayen,
O monſtrous man quoth he) what ſo thou art,
I pray ther ave, ne do not with thy death
This lodge of Lore, the Muſes manſion marre;
That treaſure houſe this hand ſhall never ſpoyle,
My ſword ſhall never bruiſe that ſkulfull brayne,
Long gather'd heapes of ſcience ſone to ſpil;
O how fayre fruites may you to mortal men
From Wiſdoms garden give; how many may
By you the wiſer and the better prove!
What error, what mad moode, what frenzy thee
Perſwades to be downe, ſent to depe Averne,
Where no artes flouriſh, nor no knowledge vales
For all theſe fawes. When thus the ſovereign ſaid,
Alighted Zoroas with ſword unſheathed,
The careleſs king there ſmoate above the greve,
At th' opening of his quiſhes wounded him,
So that the blood down trailed on the ground:
The Macedon perceiving hurt, gan gnaſhe,
But yet his mynde he bent in any wiſe
Hym to forbeare, ſett ſpurrs unto his ſtede,
And tarnde away, leſt anger of his ſmarte
Should cauſe revenger hand deale balefull blowes;
But of the Macedonian chiefraines knights,
One Meleager could not bear this ſight,
But ran upon the ſaid Egyptian rude,
And cutt him in both knees: he fell to ground,
Wherewith a whole rout came of ſouldioars iterne;
And all in pieces hewed the ſely ſeg,
But happely the ſoule fled to the ſtarres,
Where, under him, he hath full ſight of all,
Whereat he gazed here with reaching looke.
The Perſians would ſuch ſapience to forgoe,
The very ſone the Macedonians wiſht
He would have lived, king Alexander ſelfe
Deride him a man unmete to dye at all,
Who wonne like praiſe for conqueſt of his Yre,
As for ſtoute men in field that day ſubdued,
Who princes taught how to diſcerne a man,
That in his head ſo rare a jewel beares,
But over all thoſe fame Camenes, thoſe fame,
Divine Camenes, whoſe honour he procurde,
As tender parent doth his daughters weale,
I ..ed, and for thankes, all that they can,
I .. th hym deceaſt, and fett him free,
From dark obvion of devouring death.

Barclay wrote about 1550; his chief work is the Ship of Fooles, of which the following extract will ſhew his ſtyle.

Of Mockers and Scorners, and falſe Accuſers.

O Heartleſs fooles, hatte here to our doctrine,
Leaue off the wayes of your enormitie,
Enforce you to my preceptes to encline,
For here ſhall I ſhewe you good and vertue:
Enclyne, and ye finde ſhall great proſperitie,
Enbrace the doctrine of our fathers olde,
And godly lawes in vallour worth great golde.
Who that will followe the graces manyfolde
Which are in vertue, ſhall finde auauncement:
Wherfore ye fooles that in your ſinne are bolde,
Refuſe ye wiſdome, and leaue your lewde intent,
Wiſedome is the way of men moſt excellent:
Therfore haue done, and ſhortly ſpede your pace,
To quaynt your ſelf and company with grace.

Learne

Learne what is vertue, therin is great ſolace,
Learne what is truth, ſadnes and prudence,
Let grutche be gone, and graunte purchaſe,
Forſake your folly and inconuenience,
Ceaſe to be fooles, and ay to ſue offence,
Followe ye vertue, chefe roote of godlynes,
For it and wiſedome is ground of cleanlynes.
Wiſedome and vertue two thinges are doubtles,
Which che man endueth with honour ſpecial,
But ſuche heartes as ſlepe in foolyſhnes
Knoweth nothing, and will nought know at all:
Shut in this little barge in principal.
Although mockers I purpoſe to repreue,
Clawe he his backe that feeleth itche or greue.
Mockers and ſcorners that are harde of beleue,
With a rough combe here will I clawe and grate,
To proue if they will from their vice remeue,
And leaue their folly, which cauſeth great debate:
Suche caytifes ſpare neyther poore man nor eſtate,
And where their ſelfe are moſte worthy derision,
Other men to ſcorne is all their moſt condition.
Yet are no fooles of this abuſion,
Whiche of wise men deſpiſeth the doctrine,
With mowes, mockes, ſcorne, and confuſion,
Rewarding rebukes for their good diſcipline:
Shewe to ſuche wiſdome, yet ſhall they not encline
Unto the ſame, but let nothing therby,
But mocke thy doctrine, ſtill or openly.
So in the worlde it appeareth commonly,
That who that with a foole rebuke or blame,
A mocke or mowe ſhall he haue by and by:
Thus in deriſion haue fooles their ſpeciall game.
Correct a wiſe man that would eſchue ill name,
And fayne would learne, and his lewde life amende,
And to thy wordes he gladly ſhall intende.
If by misfortune a righteouſe man offende,
He gladly ſuffereth a iuſte correction,
And him that him teacheth taketh for his frende,
Him ſelfe putting meekely unto ſubiection,
Following his preceptes and good direction:
But yf that one a foole rebuke or blame,
He ſhall his teacher hate, ſlaunder and diffame.
Howbeit his wordes oft turne to his own ſhame,
And his owne dartes retourne to him agayne,
And ſo he ſore wounded with the ſame,
And in woe endeth, great miſery and payne.
It alſo proued full often is certayne,
That they that on mockers alway their mindes caſt,
Shall of all other be mocked at the laſt.
He that goeth right, ſtedfaſt, ſure, and faſt,
May him well mocke that goeth halting and lame,
And he that is white may well his ſcornes caſt,
Againſt a man of Inde: but no man ought to blame
Anothers vice, while he vſeth the ſame.
But who that of ſinne is cleane in deede and thought,
May him well ſcorne whoſe liuing is ſtarke nought.
The ſcornes of Nabal ful dere ſhould haue been bought,
If Abigayl his wife diſcrete and ſage,
Had not by kindnes right crafty meanes ſought,
The wrath of Dauid to temper and aſſwage.
Hath not two beares in their fury and rage
Two and fortie children rent and torne,
For they the prophete Helyſeus did ſcorne.
So might they curſe the time that they were borne,
For their mocking of this prophete diuine:
So many other of this ſort often mourne
For their lewde mockes, and fall into ruine.
Thus is it foly for wiſe men to enclyne,
To this lewde flocke of fooles, for ſee thou ſhall
Them moſte ſcorning that are moſt bad of all.

The Lenuoy of Barclay to the fooles.

Ye mocking fooles that in ſcorne ſet your ioy,
Proudly deſpiſing Gods puniſion:
Take ye example by Cham the ſonne of Noy,
Which laughed his father vnto deriſion,
Which him after curſed for his tranſgreſſion,
And made him ſeruaunt to all his lyne and ſtocke.
So ſhall ye caytifs at the concluſion,
Since ye are nought, and other ſcorne and mocke.

About the year 1553 wrote Dr. Wilſon, a man celebrated for the politeneſs of his ſtyle, and the extent of his knowledge: what was the ſtate of our language in his time, the following may be of uſe to ſhow.

PRonunciation is an apte orderinge bothe of the voyce, countenaunce, and all the whole bodye, accordynge to the worthines of ſuche woordes and matter as by ſpeache are declared. The vſe hereof is ſuche for anye one that liketh to haue prayſe for teſtyfyenge his talent open aſſemblie, that hauing a good tongue, and a comelye countenaunce, he ſhalbe thought to paſſe all other that haue the like vtteraunce though they haue much better learning. The tongue geueth a certayne grace to everye matter, and beautifieth the cauſe in like maner, as a ſweete ſoundynge lute muche ſetteth forthe a meane deuiſed ballade. Or as the ſounde of a good inſtrumente ſtyrreth the hearers, and moueth muche delite, ſo a cleare ſoundyng voice comforteth muche our dulle eares, with muche ſweete melodie, and cauſeth vs to allowe the matter rather for the reporters ſake, then the reporter for the matters ſake. Demoſthenes therfore, that famouſe oratour, beyng aſked what was the cheefeſt point in al oratorie, gaue the chiefe and onely praiſe to Pronunciation; being demaunded, what was the ſeconde, and the thirde, he ſtil made anſwere, Pronunciation, and would make none other aunſwere, till they left aſkyng, declaryng hereby that arte without vtteraunce can doe nothyng, vtteraunce without arte can doe right muche. And no doubte that man is in outwarde apparaunce halfe a good clarke, that hath a cleane tongue, and a comely geſture of his body. Æſchines lykwyſe beyng banniſhed his countrie through Demoſthenes, when he had redde to the Rhodians his own oration, and Demoſthenes aunſwere thereunto, by force whereof he was banniſhed, and all they marueiled muche at the excellencie of the fame: then (q d Æſchines) you would haue marueiled muche more if you had heard hymſelfe ſpeak it. Thus beyng caſt in miſerie and banniſhed for euer, he could not but geue ſuch great reporte of his deadly and mortal enemy.

This have I deduced the Engliſh language from the age of Alfred to that of Elizabeth; in ſome parts imperfectly for want of materials; but I hope, at leaſt, in ſuch a manner that its progreſs may be eaſily traced, and the gradations obſerved, by which it advanced from its firſt rudeneſs to its preſent elegance.

A GRAM-

ENGLISH TONGUE.

GRAMMAR, which is the art of uſing words properly, compriſes four parts; Orthography, Etymology, Syntax, and Proſody.

In this diviſion and order of the parts of grammar I follow the common grammarians, without enquiring whether a fitter diſtribution might not be found. Experience has long ſhown this method to be ſo eſtabliſhed as to obviate confuſion, and ſo comprehenſive as to prevent any inconvenient omiſſions. I likewiſe uſe the terms already received, and already underſtood, though perhaps others more proper might ſometimes be invented. Sylburgius, and other innovators, whoſe new terms have ſunk their learning into neglect, have left ſufficient warning againſt the raſh ambition of teaching arts in a new language.

ORTHOGRAPHY is the art of combining letters into ſyllables, and ſyllables into words. It therefore teaches previouſly the form and ſound of letters.

The letters of the Engliſh language are,

To theſe may be added certain combinations of letters univerſally uſed in printing; as ct, ſt, fl, ſl, ſb, ſk, ff, ffl, fi, ffi, fl, ffl, and &c, or and per ſe, and. ct, ſt, fl, ſl, ſb, ſk, ff, ffl, fi, ffi, fl, ffl, &. ct, ſt, fl, ſl, ff, ffl, fi, ffi, fl, ffi, &.

Our letters are commonly reckoned twenty four, but as i and j, as well as u and w, were expreſſed by the ſame [illegible] but as thoſe letters, which have always diffe[illegible] different forms, our alphabet may be properly ſaid to conſiſt of twenty-ſix letters.

None of the ſmall conſonants have a double form, except f, ſ, of which f is uſed in the beginning and middle, and ſ at the end.

Vowels are five, a, e, i, o, u.

Such is the number generally received; but for i it is the practice to write y in the end of words, as thy, holy; before i, as from die, dying, from beautify, beautifying; in the words ſays, days, eyes; and in words derived from the Greek, and written originally with υ, as ſyſtem, [illegible].

For u we often write w after a vowel, to make a diphthong; as raw, grew, view, vow, flowing, lowneſs.

The ſounds of all the letters are various.

In treating on the letters, I ſhall not, like ſome other grammarians, enquire into the original of their form as an antiquarian, nor into their formation and pronunciation by the organs of ſpeech, as a mechanick, anatomiſt, or phyſiologiſt; nor into the properties and gradation of ſounds, or the elegance or harſhneſs of particular combinations, as a writer of univerſal and tranſcendental grammar. I conſider the Engliſh alphabet only as it is Engliſh; and even in this narrow view I follow the example of former grammarians, perhaps with more reverence than judgment, becauſe by writing in Engliſh I ſuppoſe my reader already acquainted with the Engliſh language, and becauſe of ſounds in general it may be obſerved, that words are unable to deſcribe them. An account therefore of the primitive and ſimple letters is uſeleſs almoſt alike to thoſe who know their ſound, and thoſe who know it not.

Of VOWELS.

A.

A has three ſounds, the ſlender, open, and broad.

A ſlender is found in moſt words, as face, mane; and in words ending in ation, as creation, ſalvation, generation.

[illegible] is the proper Engliſh a, called very juſtly by Erpenius, grammar, a Angelicum cum e mixtum, as having a middle ſound between the open a and the e. The French have a ſimilar ſound in the word pais, and in their e maſculine.

A open is the a of the Italian, or nearly reſembles it; as father, rather, congratulate, fancy, glaſs.

A broad reſembles the a of the German; as all, wall, tall.

Many words pronounced with a broad were anciently written with au, as fault, vault; and we ſtill ſay fault, vault. This was probably the Saxon ſound, for it is yet retained in the northern dialects, and in the ruſtick pronunciation, as maun for man, baund for band.

The ſhort a approaches to the a open, as aſs.

The long a, if prolonged by e at the end of the word, is always ſlender, as graze, fame.

A forms a diphthong only with i or y, and u or w. Ai or ay, as in plain, wain, gay, clay, has only the ſound of the long and ſlender a, and differs not in the pronunciation from plane, wane.

Au or aw has the ſound of the German a, as raw, naughty.

Ae is ſometimes found in Latin words not completely naturaliſed or aſſimilated, but is no Engliſh diphthong, and is more properly expreſſed by ſingle e, as Cæſar, Æneas.

E

E is the letter which occurs moſt frequently in the Engliſh language.

E is long, as in ſcene; or ſhort, as in cĕllar, ſĕparate, cĕlebrate, mĕn, thĕn.

It is always ſhort before a double conſonant, or two conſonants, relĕnt, medĭar, rĕptile, ſĕrpĕnt, cĕllar, cĕſſation, blĕſſing, fĕll, fĕlling, dĕbt

E is always mute at the end of a word, except in monoſyllables that have no other vowel, as the, or proper names, as Penelope, Phebe, Derbe, being uſed to modify the foregoing conſonant, as ſince, once, bridge, oblige; or to lengthen the preceding vowel, as băn, bane; căn, căne; pĭn, pīne; tŭn, tūne; röb, röbe; pŏp, pope; fir, fīre; cŭr, cūre; tŭb, tube

Almoſt all words which now terminate in conſonants ended anciently in e, which was then ſounded with the force of the French e feminine, and conſtituted a ſyllable with a foregoing conſonant; for, in old editions, words are ſometimes divided thus, den re, fel le, knowled ge. This e was perhaps for a time vocal or ſilent in poetry as convenience required; but it has been long wholly mute. Camden calls it the ſilent e.

It does not always lengthen the foregoing vowel, as glŏve, ſhŏve, grŏve.

It has ſometimes in the end of words a ſound obſcure, and ſcarcely perceptible, as open, ſhapen, ſhorten, thiſtle, parable, metre, lucre

E forms a diphthong with a, as near; with i, as deign, receive; and with u or w, as new, ſhew

Ea ſounds like e long, as mean; or like ee, as dear, clear, near.

Ei is ſounded like e long, as ſeize, perceiving

Eu ſounds as u long and ſoft.

E, a, u are combined in beauty and its derivatives, but have only the ſound of u.

E may be ſaid to form a diphthong by reduplication, as agree, ſleeping.

Ee is found in ſeven, where it is ſounded as e ſhort, and in people, where it is pronounced like ee

I

I has a ſound, long, as fine; and ſhort, as fin

That is eminently obſervable in i, which may be likewiſe remarked in other letters, that the ſhort ſound is not the long ſound contracted, but a ſound wholly different.

The long ſound in monoſyllables is always marked by the e final, as thin, thine.

I is often ſounded before r as a ſhort u; as firſt, firſt, ſkirt

It forms a diphthong only with e, as field, ſhield, which is founded as the double ee; except friend, which is ſounded as frĕnd.

I is joined with ew in lieu, and eu in view; which triphthongs are ſounded as the open u.

O.

O is long, as bone, obedient, corroding; or ſhort, as [illegible]

Women is pronounced wimen.

The ſhort o has ſometimes the ſound of a cloſe u, as ſon, come.

O coaleſces into a diphthong with a, as moan, groan, approach; oa has the ſound of o long.

O is united to e in ſome words derived from Greek, as œconomy; but œ being not an Engliſh diphthong, they are better written as [illegible]

With i, as oil, foil, moil, noiſome.

This coalition of letters ſeems to unite the ſounds of the two letters [illegible] therefore approaches more nearly than any combination in our tongue to the notion of a diphthong

With o, as boot, hoot, cooler; oo has the ſound of the Italian u

With u or w, as our, power, flower; but in ſome words has only the ſound of o long, as in ſoul, bowl, ſow, grow These different ſounds are uſed to diſtinguiſh different ſignifications; as bow, an inſtrument for ſhooting, bow, a depreſſion of the head: ſow, the ſhe of a boar, ſow, to ſcatter ſeed: bowl, an orbicular body, bowl, a wooden veſſel.

Ou is ſometimes pronounced like o ſoft, as court; ſometimes like o ſhort, as cough; ſometimes like u cloſe, as could, or u open, as rough, tough; which uſe only can teach.

Ou is frequently uſed in the laſt ſyllable of words which in Latin end in or, and are made Engliſh, as honour, labour, favour, from honor, labor, favor.

Some late innovators have ejected the u, without conſidering that the laſt ſyllable gives the ſound neither of or nor ur, but a ſound between them. F not compounded of both, beſides that they are probably derived to us from the French nouns in eur, as honeur, faveur.

U.

U is long in ūſe, confuſion; or ſhort, as ŭs, concŭſſion.

It coaleſces with a, e, i, o; but has rather in theſe combinations the force of the w conſonant, as quaff, queſt, quit, quite, languiſh; ſometimes in gu the u loſes its ſound, as in juice. It is ſometimes mute before a, e, i, y, as guard, gueſt, guide, buy.

U is followed by e in virtue, but the e has no ſound

Ue is ſometimes mute at the end of a word, in imitation of the French, as prorogue, ſynagogue, plague, rogue, harangue.

I

I is a vowel, which, as Quintilian obſerves of one of the Roman letters, we might want without inconvenience, but that we have it. It ſupplies the place of i at the end of words, as thy; before an i, as dying, and is commonly retained in derivative words where it was part of a diphthong in the primitive; as deſtroy, deſtroyer, betray, betrayed, betrayer; pray, prayer; joy, joyer; day, days.

Y being the Saxon vowel y, which was commonly uſed where i is now put, occurs very frequently in all old books.

General Rules.

A vowel in the beginning or middle ſyllable, before two conſonants, is commonly ſhort, as öpportunity.

In monoſyllables a ſingle vowel before a ſingle conſonant is ſhort, as ſtag, frog.

Of CONSONANTS.

B.

B has one unvaried ſound, ſuch as it obtains in other languages.

It is mute in debt, debtor, ſubtle, doubt, lamb, limb, dumb, thumb, climb, comb, womb

It is uſed before l and r, as black, brown.

C.

C has before e and i the ſound of ſ; as ſincerely, certain, century, circular, ciſtern, city, ſpecify: before a, o, and u, it ſounds like k, as cam, concavity, copper, incorporate, curioſity, concupiſcence.

C might be omitted in the language without loſs, ſince one of its ſounds might be ſupplied by ſ, and the other by k, but that it preſerves to the eye the etymology of words, as face from facies, vice from captivus

Ch has a ſound which is analyſed into tſh, as church, chin, crutch. It is the ſame ſound which the Italians give to the c ſimple before i and e, as citta, cerro.

Ch is ſounded like k in words derived from the Greek, as chymiſt, ſcheme, choler. Arch is commonly ſounded ark before a vowel, as archangel; and with the Engliſh ſound of ch before a conſonant as archbiſhop.

Ch, in ſome French words not yet aſſimilated, ſounds like ſh, as chaiſe, chaiſe

C, according to Engliſh orthography, never ends a word; therefore we write ſtick, black, which were originally ſtic, blac, in ſuch words. C is now mute.

It is uſed before l and r, as clack, crack

Is uniform in its ſound, as death, diligent.

It is uſed before r, as dream, dreſs, and w, as dwell.

F

F, though having a name beginning with a vowel, it is numbered by the grammarians among the ſemivowels, yet has this quality of a mute, that it is commodiouſly ſounded before a liquid, as flaſk, fly, freckle. It has an unvariable ſound, except that of is ſometimes ſpoken nearly as ov

G.

G has two ſounds, one hard, as in gay, go, gum; the other ſoft, as in gem, giant.

At

At the end of a word it is always hard, ring, ſing, long, frog

[illegible] are [illegible] for [illegible] is [illegible]

G before e is ſoft, as gem, generation, except in gear, geld, geeſe, get, gewgaw, and derivatives from words ending in g, as ſinging, ſtronger, and generally before er at the end of words, as finger.

G is mute before n, as gnaſh, ſign, foreign.

G before t is hard, as grot, except in giant, giganteſk, gibbet, gift, giblets, giles, gill, gilliflower, gin, ginger, gingle, gipſy.

Gh in the beginning of a word has the ſound of the hard g, as ghoſtly; in the middle, and ſometimes at the end, it is quite ſilent, as though, right, fought, ſpoken tho', rite, ſaute.

It has often at the end the ſound of f, as laugh; whence laughter retains the ſame ſound in the middle, cough, trough, ſough, tough, enough, ſlough.

It is not to be doubted, but that in the original pronunciation gh had the force of a conſonant, deeply guttural, which is ſtill continued among the Scotch.

G is uſed before a, l, and r.

H

H is a note of aſpiration, and ſhows that the following vowel muſt be pronounced with a ſtrong emiſſion of the breath, as hat, horſe.

It ſeldom, perhaps never, begins any but the firſt ſyllable, in which it is always ſounded with a full breath, except in heir, herb, hoſtler, honour, humble, honeſt, humour, and their derivatives.

J.

J conſonant ſounds uniformly like the ſoft g, and is therefore a letter uſeleſs, except in etymology, as ejaculation, jeſter, jocund, juice.

K.

K has the ſound of hard c, and is uſed before e and i, where, according to Engliſh analogy, c would be ſoft, as kept, king, ſkirt, ſkeptick, for ſo it ſhould be written, not ſceptick.

It is uſed before n, as knell, knit, but totally looſes its ſound.

K is never doubled; but c is uſed before it to ſhorten the vowel by a double conſonant, as cockle, pickle.

L

L has in Engliſh the ſame liquid ſound as in other languages.

The cuſtom is to double the l at the end of monoſyllables as will, full. Theſe words were originally written hwile, ful [illegible] on the e [illegible] to give [illegible] to the foregoing vowel.

L is ſometimes mute, as in calf, half, halves, could, would, ſhould, pſalm, talk, ſalmon, falcon.

The Saxon, who delighted in guttural ſounds, ſometimes aſſ the l at the beginning of words, as hlaf, a loaf, or bread, [illegible] a lord; but this pronunciation is now diuſed.

Le at the end of words is pronounced like a weak el, in which the e is almoſt mute, as table, ſhuttle.

M

M has always the ſame ſound, as murmur, monumental.

N

N has always the ſame ſound, as noble, manners.

N is ſometimes mute after m, as damn, condemn, hymn.

P

P has always the ſame ſound, which the Welſh and Germans confound with B.

P is ſometimes mute, as in pſalm, and between m and t, as tempt.

Ph is uſed for f in words derived from the Greek, as [illegible], p

Q

Q, as in other languages, is always followed by u, and has a ſound which our Saxon anceſtors well expreſſed by cp, cw, as quadrant, queen, equeſtrian, quilt, enquiry, quare, quotidian. Qu is never followed by u.

Qu is ſometimes ſounded, in words derived from the French, like k, as conquer, liquor, riſque, chequer.

R.

R has the ſame rough ſnarling ſound as in other tongues.

The Saxons uſed often to put b before it, as before l at the beginning of words.

Rh is uſed in words derived from the Greek, as myrrh, myrrh

Re, at the end of ſome words derived from the Latin or French, is pronounced like a weak er, as theatre, ſepulchre.

S has a hiſſing ſound, as ſibilation, ſiſter.

A ſingle s ſeldom ends any word, except the third perſon of verbs, [illegible] the pronouns this, his, ours, yours, as, the adverb thus, and words derived from Latin, as rebus, ſurplus; the cloſe being always either in ſe, as houſe, horſe, or in ſs, as graſs, dreſs, blaſs, leſs, anciently [illegible]

S ſingle, at the end of words, has a groſſer ſound, like that of z, as trees, eyes, except this, thus, us, rebus, [illegible]

It ſounds like x before ion, if a vowel goes before, as intruſion; and like ſh, if it follows a conſonant, as converſion.

It ſounds like z before e mute, as refuſe, and before y final, as roſy, and in thoſe words, boſom, deſire, wiſdom, priſon, priſoner, preſent, preſent, damſel, caſement.

It is the peculiar quality of ſ, that it may be ſounded before all conſonants, except x and z, in which ſ is comprized, x being only ks, and z a hard or groſs ſ. This ſ is therefore termed by Grammarians ſuperfluæ poteſtatis literæ, the reaſon of which the learned Dr [illegible] ſuppoſed to be, that in ſome words it might be doubled at pleaſure. Thus we find in ſeveral languages [illegible]

S is mute in iſle, iſland, demeſne, viſcount.

T has its cuſtomary ſound, as take, temptation.

Ti before a vowel has the ſound of ſi, as ſalvation, except an ſ goes before, as queſtion, excepting [illegible] wiſe derivatives from y, as mighty, mightier.

Th has two ſounds; the one ſoft, as thus, whether; the other hard, as thing, think. The ſound is ſoft in theſe words, then, thence, and there, with their derivatives and compounds, that, theſe, thou, thee, thy, theme, their, they, this, theſe, them, though, thus, and in all words between two vowels, as father, whether; and between r and a vowel, as burthen.

In other words it is hard, as thick, thunder, faith, faithful. Where it is ſoftened at the end of a word, an e ſilent muſt be added, as breath, breathe; cloth, clothe.

V

V has a ſound of near affinity to that of f, vain, vanity.

From ſ in the Iſlandick alphabet, v is only diſtinguiſhed by a diacritical point.

W

Of w, which in diphthongs is often an undoubted vowel, ſome grammarians have doubted whether it ever be a conſonant; and not rather as it is called a double u or ou, as water may be reſolved into vuater; but letters of the ſame ſound are always reckoned conſonants in other alphabets: and it may be obſerved, that w follows a vowel without any hiatus or difficulty of utterance, as froſty winter.

Wh has a ſound accounted peculiar to the Engliſh, which the Saxons better expreſſed by hp, hw, as what, whence, whiting; in whore only, and ſometimes in wholeſome, wh is ſounded like a ſimple h.

X

X begins no Engliſh word; it has the ſound of ks, as axle, extraneous.

Y, when it follows a conſonant, is a vowel; when it precedes either vowel or diphthong, is a conſonant, ye, ye, young. It is thought by ſome to be in all caſes a vowel. But it may be obſerved of y as of w, that it follows a vowel without any hiatus, as roſy youth.

Z.

Z begins no word originally Engliſh; it has the ſound as its name izzard or ſ hard expreſſes, of an ſ uttered with cloſer compreſſion of the palate by the tongue, as freeze, froze.

In orthography I have ſuppoſed orthoepy, or juſt utterance of words, to be included, orthography being only the art of expreſſing certain ſounds by proper characters. I have therefore obſerved in what words any of the letters are mute.

Moſt of the writers of Engliſh grammar have given long tables of words pronounced otherwiſe than they are written, and ſeem not ſufficiently to have conſidered, that of Engliſh, as of all living tongues, there is a double pronunciation, one curſory and colloquial, the other regular and ſolemn. The curſory pronunciation is always vague and uncertain, being made different in different mouths by negligence, unſkilfulneſs, or affectation. The ſolemn pronunciation, though by no means immutable and permanent, is yet always leſs remote from the orthography, and leſs liable to capricious innovation. They have however generally formed their tables according to the curſory ſpeech of thoſe with whom they happened to converſe, and concluding that the whole nation combines to vitiate language in one manner, have often eſtabliſhed the jargon of the loweſt of the people as the model of ſpeech.

For pronunciation the beſt general rule is, to conſider thoſe as the moſt elegant ſpeakers who deviate leaſt from the written words.

There have been many ſchemes offered for the emendation and ſettlement of our orthography, which, like that of other nations, being formed by chance, or according to the fancy of the earlieſt writers in rude ages, was at firſt very various and uncertain, and is yet ſufficiently irregular. Of theſe reformers ſome have endeavoured to accommodate orthography better to the pronunciation, without conſidering that this is to meaſure by a ſhadow, to take that for a model or ſtandard which is changing while they apply it. Others, leſs abſurdly indeed, but with equal unlikelihood of ſucceſs, have endeavoured to proportion the number of letters to that of ſounds, that every ſound may have its own character, and every character a ſingle ſound. Such would be the orthography of a new language to be formed by a ſynod of grammarians upon principles of ſcience. But who can hope to prevail on nations to change their practice, and make all their old books uſeleſs? or what advantage would a new orthography procure equivalent to the confuſion and perplexity of ſuch an alteration?

Some of theſe ſchemes I ſhall however exhibit, which may be uſed according to the diverſities of genius, as a guide to reformers, or terrour to innovators.

One of the firſt who propoſed a ſcheme of regular orthography, was Sir Thomas Smith, ſecretary of ſtate to Queen Elizabeth, a man of real learning, and much practiſed in grammatical diſquiſitions. Had he written the following lines according to his ſcheme, they would have appeared thus.

> At length Eraſmus, that great injur'd name,
> The glory of the prieſthood, and the ſhame,
> Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age,
> And drove thoſe holy Vandals off the ſtage.

> A length Eraſmus, dhat gret injurd nam,
> De glori of de prieſthud, and de ſame,
> Stemmd de wild torrent of a barb'rous age,
> And drov doſe holi Vandals off de ſtage.

After him another mode of writing was offered by Dr Gill, the celebrated maſter of St. Paul's ſchool in London, which I cannot repreſent exactly for want of types, but will approach as nearly as I can by means of characters now in uſe as to make it underſtood, exhibiting two ſtanzas of Spenſer in the reformed orthography.

Spenſer, book iii. canto 5.

> Unthankful wretch, ſaid he, is this the meed,
> With which her ſovereign mercy thou doſt quite?
> Thy life ſhe ſaved by her gracious deed,
> But thou doſt weep with villainous deſpight,
> To blot her honour, and her heav'nly light.
> Die, rather die, than ſo diſloyally,
> Deem of her high deſert, or ſeem ſo light.
> Fair death it is to ſhun more ſhame; then die,
> Die, rather die, than ever love diſloyalty.
> But if to love diſloyalty it be,
> Shame then hath her, that from deathes door
> Me brought: ah! ſhe far other reaſon me.
> What can I leſs do, than her love therefore,
> Sith I her due reward cannot reſtore?
> Die, rather die, and dying do her ſerve,
> Dying her ſerve, and living her adore
> Thy life ſhe gave, thy life ſhe doth deſerve;
> Die, rather die, than ever from her ſo [illegible]

> Vnthankful wretch, ſaid hi, is dis de mid,
> Wih wits her ſoferein mersi dou duſt quit?
> Di ſif ſi ſabid hi her gracious [illegible]
> [illegible]
> Di, rader di, to [illegible]
> Dim of her hi deſert, [illegible]
> For [illegible] a mar rādn ſi dis di.
> Di, rader di, dan [illegible]

Dr. Gill was followed by Charles Butler, a man who did not want an underſtanding which might have qualified him for better employment. He ſeems to have been more ſanguine than his predeceſſors, for he printed his book according to his own ſcheme; which the following ſpecimen will make eaſily underſtood.

> But whenſoever you have occaſion to trouble their patience, or to come among them being troubled, it is better to ſtand upon your guards, than to truſt to their gentleneſs. For the ſafeguard of your face, which they have moſt mind unto, provide a parichood, made of coarſe bouking, to be drawn and knit about your collar, which for more ſafety is to be lined againſt the eminent parts with woollen cloth. Firſt cut a piece about an inch and a half broad, and half a yard long, to reach round by the temples and forehead, from ear to the other; which being ſowed in his place, join unto it two ſhort pieces of the ſame breadth under the eyes, for the bails of the cheeks, and then ſet an other piece about the breadth of a ſhilling againſt the top of the noſe. At other times, when they are not angered, a little piece half a quarter broad, to cover the eyes and about them, may ſerve though it be in the heat of the day.

> But penſiſever you hav occaſion to trubble Der patience, or to come amo[illegible] having trubled, it is better to ſtand upon your gard, dan to truſt to Der gen[illegible]
> For De ſef gard of your fac', pich Dey hav moſt [illegible] > made of coarſe bouſ[illegible] and knit about your [illegible]
> [illegible]
> about an inch and a half broad, and half a yard long, to reach round by De temples and forhead, from one ear to De oder, pich being ſowed in his place, join unto it two ſort peeces of the ſam breadth under De eye, for the baſe of De cheeks, and then ſet an oder piec about De breadth of a ſhilling againſt the top of De noſe. At De times, pen Dey ar' not angered, a little piec half a quarter broad to cover De eye and parts about dem, may ſerve dough it be in the heat of De day. Bucler on the Nature and Properties of Bees, 1634.

In the reign of Charles I. there was a very prevalent deſire to change the orthography; as appears, among other books, in ſuch editions of the works of Milton as were publiſhed by himſelf. Of theſe reformers every man had his own ſcheme; but they agreed in one general deſign of accommodating the letters to the pronunciation, by ejecting ſuch as they thought ſuperfluous. Some of them would have written theſe lines thus:

> ——All the erth
> Shall then be paradis, far happier plac
> Than this of Eden, and far happier daies.

Biſhop Wilkins afterwards, in his great work of the philoſophical language, propoſed, without expecting to be followed, a regular orthography; by which the Lord's prayer is to be written thus:

> Fader our ſhu art in heven, hilovd bi dy nam, dy kingdym kym, dy will be dun in erth as it is in heven, &c.

We have ſince had no general reformers, but ſome ingenious men have endeavoured to deſerve well of their country, by writing honour and labor for honour and labour; red for read in the preterite tenſe; for ſays, repete for repeat, expoſure for expoſure, or declame for declaim. Of theſe it may be ſaid, that as they have done no good, they have done little harm, both becauſe they have innovated little, and becauſe few have followed them.

ETYMOLOGY

ETYMOLOGY teaches the deduction of one word from another, and the various modifications by which the ſenſe of the ſame word is diverſified; as horſe, horſes; I love, I loved.

Of the ARTICLE.

The Engliſh have two articles, an or a, and the.

AN, A.

A has an indefinite ſignification, and means one, with ſome reference to more, as, This is a good book, that is, one among the books that are good. He was killed by a ſword, that is, ſome ſword. This is a better book for a man than a boy, that is, for one of thoſe that are men than one of thoſe that are boys. An army might enter without reſiſtance, that is, any army.

In the ſenſes in which we uſe a or an in the ſingular, we ſpeak in the plural without an article, as, theſe are good books.

I have made an the original article, becauſe it is only the a, or an, one, applied to a new uſe, as the German ein, and [illegible]

French un, the n being cut off before a conſonant in the ſpeed of utterance.

Grammarians of the laſt age direct, that an ſhould be uſed before h; whence it appears that the Engliſh anciently aſpirated leſs an is ſtill uſed before the ſilent h, as an herb, an honeſt man: but otherwiſe a; as,

A horſe, a horſe, my kingdom for a horſe.
Shakeſpeare.

THE has a particular and definite ſignification.

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whoſe mortal taſte
Brought death into the world. Milton.

That is, that particular fruit, and this world in which we live. So He giveth fodder for the cattle, and green herbs for the uſe of man; that is, for thoſe beings that are cattle, and his uſe that is man.

The is uſed in both numbers.

I am as free as Nature firſt made man,
Ere the baſe laws of ſervitude began,
When wild in woods the noble ſavage ran. Dryd.

Many words are uſed without articles; as,

1. Proper names, as John, Alexander, Longinus, Ariſtarchus, Jeruſalem, Athens, Rome, London. GOD is uſed as a proper name.

2. Abſtract names, as blackneſs, witchcraft, virtue, vice, beauty, uglineſs, love, hatred, anger, goodnature, kindneſs.

3. Words in which nothing but the mere being of any thing is implied: This is not beer, but water; This is not braſs, but ſteel.

Of NOUNS SUBSTANTIVES.

The relations of Engliſh nouns to words going before or following are not expreſſed by caſes, or changes of termination, but as in moſt of the other European languages by prepoſitions, unleſs we may be ſaid to have a genitive caſe.

Singular.

Nom.	Magiſter,	a Maſter, the Maſter.
Gen.	Magiſtri,	of a Maſter, of the Maſter, or Maſters, the Maſters.
Dat.	Magiſtro,	to a Maſter, to the Maſter.
Acc.	Magiſtrum,	a Maſter, the Maſter.
Voc.	Magiſter,	Maſter, O Maſter.
Abl.	Magiſtro,	from a Maſter, from the Maſter.

Plural.

Nom.	Magiſtri,	Maſters, the Maſters.
Gen.	Magiſtrorum,	of Maſters, of the Maſters.
Dat.	Magiſtris,	to Maſters, to the Maſters.
Acc.	Magiſtros,	Maſters, the Maſters.
Voc.	Magiſtri,	Maſters, O Maſters.
Abl.	Magiſtris,	from Maſters, from the Maſters.

Our nouns are therefore only declined thus:

Maſter,	Gen. Maſters.	Plur. Maſters.
Scholar,	Gen. Scholars.	Plur. Scholars.

Theſe genitives are always written with a mark of eliſion, maſter's, ſcholar's, according to an opinion long received that the s is a contraction of his, as the ſoldier's valour, for the ſoldier his valour: but this cannot be the true original, becauſe 's is put to female nouns, Woman's beauty; the Virgin's delicacy; Haughty Juno's unrelenting hate: and collective nouns, as Women's paſſions; the rabble's inſolence; the multitude's folly; in all theſe caſes it is apparent that his cannot be underſtood. We ſay, the ſwan's ſtrength, the diamond's luſtre, the winter's ſeverity; but in theſe caſes his may be underſtood, he and his having formerly been applied to neuters in the place now ſupplied by it and its.

The learned, the ſagacious Wallis, to whom every Engliſh grammarian owes a tribute of reverence, calls this modification of the noun an adjective poſſeſſive; I think with no more propriety than he might have applied the ſame to the genitive in equitum decus, Trojæ ſenex, or any other Latin genitive.

This termination of the noun ſeems to conſtitute a real genitive indicating poſſeſſion. It is derived to us from thoſe who declined ruth, a ſmith; Gen. ruthes, of a ſmith; Plur. ruthes, or ruthas, ſmiths; and ſo in two other of their ſeven declenſions.

It is a further confirmation of this opinion, that in the old poets both the genitive and plural were longer by a ſyllable than the original word: knites, for knight's, in Chaucer; leaves, for leaves, in Spenſer.

When a word ends in s, the genitive may be the ſame with the nominative, as Venus temple.

The plural is formed by adding s, as table, tables; fly, flies; ſiſter, ſiſters; wood, woods; or es where s could not otherwiſe be ſounded, as after ch, s, ſh, x, z; after c ſounded like s, and g like j; the mute e is vocal before s, as lance, lances; outrage, outrages.

The formation of the plural and genitive ſingular is the ſame.

A few words yet make the plural in n, as men, women, oxen, ſwine, and more anciently eyen and ſhoon. This formation is that which generally prevails in the Teutonick dialects.

Words that end in f commonly form their plural by ves, as loaf, loaves; calf, calves.

Except a few, muff, muffs; chief, chiefs. So hoof, roof, proof, relief, miſchief, puff, cuff, dwarf, handkerchief, grief.

Irregular plurals are teeth from tooth, lice from louſe, mice from mouſe, geeſe from gooſe, feet from foot, dice from die, pence from penny, brethren from brother, children from child.

Plurals ending in s have no genitives; but we ſay, Womens excellencies, and Weigh the mens wits againſt the ladies hairs. Pope.

Dr Wallis thinks the Lords' houſe may be ſaid for the houſe of Lords; but ſuch phraſes are not now in uſe, and ſurely an Engliſh ear rebels againſt them.

Of ADJECTIVES.

Adjectives in the Engliſh language are wholly indeclinable; having neither caſe, gender, nor number, and being added to ſubſtantives in all relations without any change; as, a good woman, good women, of a good woman; a good man, good men, of good men.

The Compariſon of Adjectives.

The comparative degree of adjectives is formed by adding er, the ſuperlative by adding eſt, to the poſitive, as, fair, fairer, faireſt; lovely, lovelier, loveliеſt; ſweet, ſweeter, ſweeteſt; low, lower, loweſt; high, higher, higheſt.

Some words are irregularly compared; as good, better, beſt; bad, worſe, worſt; little, leſs, leaſt; near, nearer, next; much, more, moſt; many (or moe), more (for moer), moſt (for moeſt); late, latter, lateſt or laſt.

Some comparatives form a ſuperlative by adding moſt, as nether, nethermoſt; outer, outmoſt; under, undermoſt; up, upper, uppermoſt; fore, former, foremoſt.

Moſt is ſometimes added to a ſubſtantive, as topmoſt, ſouthmoſt.

Many adjectives do not admit of compariſon by terminations, and are only compared by more and moſt, as benevolent, more benevolent, moſt benevolent.

All adjectives may be compared by more and moſt, even when they have comparatives and ſuperlatives regularly formed; as fair; fairer, or more fair; fairеſt, or moſt fair.

In adjectives that admit a regular compariſon, the comparative more is often uſed rather than the ſimple with er, as more fair is often better than fairer, than moſt fair than fairеſt.

The compariſon of adjectives is very uncertain; and being much regulated by commodiouſneſs of utterance, or agreeableneſs of ſound, is not eaſily reduced to rules.

Monoſyllables are commonly compared.

Polyſyllables, or words of more than two ſyllables, are ſeldom compared otherwiſe than by more and moſt, as deplorable, more deplorable, moſt deplorable.

Diſſyllables are ſeldom compared if they terminate in ſome, as fulſome, toilſome; in ful, as careful, ſpleenful, dreadful; in ing, as trifling, charming; in ous, as porous; in leſs, as careleſs, harmleſs; in ed, as wretched; in id, as candid; in al, as mortal; in ent, as recent, fervent; in ain, as certain; in ive, as miſſive; in dy, as woody; in fy, as puffy; in ky, as rocky, except lucky; in my, as roomy; in ny, as ſkinny; in py, as ropy, except happy; in ry, as hoary.

Some comparatives and ſuperlatives are yet found in good writers formed without regard to the foregoing rules, but as language is ſubjected ſo little and ſo lately to grammar, ſuch anomalies muſt frequently occur.

So ſhady is compared by Milton:

The ſhadiеſt covert hath,
Turn'd her nocturnal note. Parad. Loſt.

And virtuous:

What ſhe wills to ſay or do,
Seems wiſeſt, virtuouſeſt, diſcreeteſt, beſt. Parad. Loſt.

So trifling, by Ray, who is indeed of no great authority.

It is not fo decorous, in reſpect of God, that he ſhould immediately do all the meaneſt and triflingeſt things himſelf, without making uſe of any inferior or ſubordinate miniſter.

Ray on the Creation.

Famous, by Milton.

I ſhall be named among the famouſeſt
Of women, ſung at ſolemn feſtivals. Milton's Agoniſtes.

Inventive, by Aſcham.

Thoſe have the inventiveſt heads for all purpoſes, and roundeſt tongues in all matters. Aſcham's Schoolmaſter.

Mortal, by Bacon.

The mortaleſt poiſons practiſed by the Weſt Indians, have ſome mixture of the blood, fat, or fleſh of man. Bacon.

Natural, by Wotton.

I will now deliver a few of the propereſt and naturalleſt conſiderations that belong to this piece. Wotton's Architecture.

Wretched, by Johnſon

The wretcheder are the contemners of all helps; ſuch as preſuming on their own naturals, deride diligence, and mock at terms when they underſtand not things. B. Johnſon.

Powerful, by Milton

We have ſuſtain'd one day in doubtful fight,
What heav'n's great King hath pow'rfulleſt to ſend
Againſt us from about his throne, Paradiſe Loſt

The termination in iſh may be accounted in ſome ſort a degree of compariſon, by which the ſignification is diminiſhed below the poſitive, as black, blackiſh, or tending to blackneſs; ſalt, ſaltiſh, or having a little taſte of ſalt: they therefore admit no compariſon. This termination is ſeldom added but to words expreſſing ſenſible qualities, nor often to words of above one ſyllable, and is ſcarcely uſed in the ſolemn or ſublime ſtyle.

Of PRONOUNS.

Pronouns, in the Engliſh language, are, I, thou, he, with their plurals we, ye, they, it, who, which, what, whether, whoſoever, whatſoever, my, mine, our, ours, thy, thine, your, yours, his, her, hers, their, theirs, this, that, other, another, the ſame.

The pronouns perſonal are irregularly inflected.

	Singular.	Plural.

You is commonly uſed in modern writers for ye, particularly in the language of ceremony, where the ſecond perſon plural is uſed for the ſecond perſon ſingular, You are my friend.

Nom.	It	They	Applied to neuters or things.
Oblique.	Its	Them

For it the practice of ancient writers was to uſe he, and for its, his

The poſſeſſive pronouns, like other adjectives, are without caſes or change of termination.

The poſſeſſive of the firſt perſon is my, mine, our, ours; of the ſecond, thy, thine, your, yours; of the third, from he, his, from ſhe, her, and hers, and in the plural their, theirs, for both ſexes.

Our, your, hers, theirs, are uſed when the ſubſtantive preceding is [illegible]

Mine and thine were formerly uſed before a vowel, as mine amiable lady; which though now diſuſed in proſe, might be ſtill properly continued in poetry, they are uſed as our and your, when they are referred to a ſubſtantive preceding.

Their and theirs are the poſſeſſives likewiſe of it, and are therefore applied to things.

Pronouns relative are, who, which, what, whether, whoſoever, whatſoever.

The plural others is not uſed but when it is referred to a ſubſtantive preceding, as I have ſent other horſes. I have not ſent the ſame horſes, but others.

Another, being only an other, has no plural.

Here, there, and where, joined with certain particles, have a relative and pronominal uſe. Hereof, herein, hereby, hereafter, herewith, thereof, therein, thereby, thereupon, therewith, whereof, wherein, whereby, whereupon, wherewith, which ſignify, of this, in this, &c. of that, in that, &c. of which, in which, &c

Therefore and wherefore, which are properly, there for and where for, for that, for which, are now reckoned conjunctions, and continued in uſe. The reſt ſeem to be paſſing by degrees into neglect, though proper, uſeful, and analogous. They are referred both to ſingular and plural antecedents.

There are two more words uſed only in conjunction with pronouns, own and ſelf

Own is added to poſſeſſives, both ſingular and plural, as my own hand, our own houſe. It is emphatical, and implies a ſilent contrariety or oppoſition; as, I live in my own houſe, that is, not in a hired houſe This I did with my own hand, that is, without help, or not by proxy.

Self is added to poſſeſſives, as myſelf, yourſelves; and ſometimes to perſonal pronouns, as himſelf, itſelf, themſelves. It then, like own, expreſſes emphaſis and oppoſition, as I did this myſelf, that is, not another; or it forms a reciprocal pronoun, as We hurt ourſelves by vain rage.

Himſelf, itſelf, themſelves, is ſuppoſed by Wallis to be put by corruption, for his ſelf, it ſelf, their ſelves; ſo that ſelf is always a ſubſtantive This ſeems juſtly obſerved, for we ſay, He came himſelf, Himſelf ſhall do this; where himſelf cannot be an accuſative.

Of the VERB.

Engliſh verbs are active, as I love; or neuter, as I languiſh. The neuters are formed like the actives.

Moſt verbs ſignifying action, may likewiſe ſignify condition or habit, and become neuters, as I love, I am in love, I ſtrike, I am now ſtriking

Verbs have only two tenſes inflected in their terminations, the preſent, and ſimple preterite; the other tenſes are compounded of the auxiliary verbs have, ſhall, will, let, may, can, and the infinitive of the active or neuter verb.

The paſſive voice is formed by joining the participle preterite to the ſubſtantive verb, as I am loved.

There is likewiſe a double Preterite.
Sing. I ſhould have had, thou ſhouldſt have had, he ſhould have had;
Plur. We ſhould have had, ye ſhould have had, they ſhould have had.
In like manner we uſe, I might have had; I could have had, &c.

Infinitive Mood.
Preſent. To have. Preterite. To have had.
Participle preſent. Having. Participle preter. Had.

Verb Active. To Love.
Indicative. Preſent.
Sing. I love, thou loveſt, he loveth or loves;
Plur. We love, ye love, they love.
Preterite ſimple
Sing. I loved, thou lovedſt, he loved;
Plur. We loved, ye loved, they loved.
Preterperfect compared. I have loved, &c.
Preterpluperfect. I had loved, &c.
Future. I ſhall love, &c. I will love, &c.
Imperative.
Sing. Love or love thou, let him love;
Plur. Let us love, love or love ye, let them love.
Conjunctive. Preſent.
Sing. I love, thou love, he love;
Plur. We love, ye love, they love.
Preterite ſimple, as in the Indicative.
Preterite compound. I have loved, &c.

Future. I ſhall love, &c.
Second Future. I ſhall have loved, &c.
Potential
Preſent. I may or can love, &c
Preterite I might, could, or ſhould love, &c.
Double Pret. I might, could, or ſhould have loved, &c.
Infinitive.
Preſent. To love. Preterite. To have loved.
Participle preſent. Loving. Participle paſt. Loved.

The paſſive is formed by the addition of the participle preterite, to the different tenſes of the verb to be, which muſt therefore be here exhibited.
Indicative. Preſent.
Sing. I am, thou art, he is,
Plur. We are or be, ye are or be, they are or be.
The plural be is now little in uſe.
Preterite.
Sing. I was, thou waſt or wert, he was;
Plur. We were, ye were, they were.
Wert is properly of the conjunctive mood, and ought not to be uſed in the indicative.
Preterite compound. I have been, &c.
Preterpluperfect. I had been, &c.
Future. I ſhall or will be, &c.
Imperative.
Sing. Be thou; let him be;
Plur. Let us be; be ye; let them be.
Conjunctive. Preſent.
Sing. I be, thou beeſt, he be;
Plur. We be, ye be, they be.
Preterite.
Sing. I were, thou wert, he were;
Plur. We were, ye were, they were.
Preterite compound. I have been, &c.
Future. I ſhall have been, &c.
Potential.
I may or can; would, could, or ſhould be; could, would, or ſhould have been, &c.
Infinitive.
Preſent. To be. Preterite. To have been.
Participle pref. Being. Participle preter. Having been.

Paſſive Voice. Indicative Mood.
I am loved, &c. I was loved, &c. I have been loved, &c.
Conjunctive Mood.
If I be loved, &c. If I were loved, &c. If I ſhall have been loved, &c.
Potential Mood.
I may or can be loved, &c. I might, could, or ſhould be loved, &c. I might, could, or ſhould have been loved, &c.
Infinitive.
Preſent. To be loved. Preterite. To have been loved.
Participle. Loved.

There is another form of Engliſh verbs, in which the infinitive mood is joined to the verb do in its various inflections, which are therefore to be learned in this place.
To Do.
Indicative. Preſent.
Sing. I do, thou doſt, he doth;
Plur. We do, ye do, they do.
Preterite.
Sing. I did, thou didſt, he did;
Plur. We did, ye did, they did.
Preterite, &c. I have done, &c. I had done, &c.
Future. I ſhall or will do, &c.
Imperative.
Sing. Do thou, let him do;
Plur. Let us do, do ye, let them do.
Conjunctive. Preſent.
Sing. I do, thou do, he do;
Plur. We do, ye do, they do.
The reſt are as in the indicative.
Infinitive. To do; to have done
Participle pref. Doing, Participle preter. Done.

I do is ſometimes uſed ſuperfluouſly, as, I do love, I did love; ſimply for I love, or I loved; but this is conſidered as a vitious mode of ſpeech.

It is ſometimes uſed emphatically; as,

I do love thee, and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again. Shakeſpeare.

It is frequently joined with a negative; as, I like her, but I do not love her; I wiſhed him ſucceſs, but did not help him.

The Imperative prohibitory is ſeldom applied in the ſecond perſon, at leaſt in proſe, without the word do; as, Stop him, but do not hurt him; Praiſe beauty, but do not dote on it.

Its chief uſe is in interrogative forms of ſpeech, in which it is uſed through all the perſons; as, Do I live? Doſt thou ſtrike me? Do they rebel? Did I complain? Didſt thou love her? Did ſhe die? So likewiſe in negative interrogations; Do I not yet grieve? Did ſhe not die?

Do is thus uſed only in the ſimple tenſes.

There is another manner of conjugating neuter verbs, which, when it is uſed, may not improperly denominate them neuter paſſives, as they are inflected according to the paſſive form by the help of the verb ſubſtantive to be. They anſwer nearly to the reciprocal verbs in French; as,

I am riſen, ſurrexi, Latin; Je me ſuis levé, French.
I was walked out, exieram; Je m'etois promené.

In like manner we commonly expreſs the preſent tenſe; as, I am going, eo. I am grieving, doleo. She is dying, illa moritur. The tempeſt is raging, furit procella. I am purſuing an enemy, hoſtem inſequor. So the other tenſes, as, He was walking, ἐτυγχανεν περιπατῶν, I have been walking, I had been walking, I ſhall or will be walking.

There is another manner of uſing the active participle, which gives it a paſſive ſignification; as, The grammar is now printing, grammatica jam nunc chartis imprimitur. The braſs is forging, æra excuduntur. This is, in my opinion, a vitious expreſſion, probably corrupted from a phraſe more pure, but now ſomewhat obſolete; The book is a printing, The braſs is a forging; a being properly at, and printing and forging verbal nouns ſignifying action, according to the analogy of this language.

The indicative and conjunctive moods are by modern writers frequently confounded, or rather the conjunctive is wholly neglected when ſome convenience of verſification does not invite its revival. It is uſed among the purer writers after if, though, ere, before, whether, [illegible] Doubtleſs thou art our father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Iſrael acknowledge us not.

Of Irregular Verbs.

The Engliſh verbs were divided by Ben Johnſon into four conjugations, without any reaſon ariſing from the nature of the language, which has properly but one conjugation, ſuch as has been exemplified; from which all deviations are to be conſidered as anomalies, which are indeed in our monoſyllable Saxon verbs and the verbs derived from them very frequent; but almoſt all the verbs which have been adopted from other languages, follow the regular form.

Our verbs are obſerved by Dr Wallis to be irregular only in the formation of the preterite, and its participle. Indeed, in the ſcantineſs of our conjugations, there is ſcarcely any other place for irre[illegible]

The firſt irregularity, is a ſlight deviation from the regular form, by rapid utterance or poetical contraction: the laſt ſyllable ed is often joined with the former by ſuppreſſion of e; as, lov'd for loved; after c, ch, ſh, f, k, x, and after the conſonants ſ, th, when more ſtrongly pronounced, and ſometimes after m, n, r, if preceded by a ſhort vowel, t is uſed in pronunciation, but very ſeldom in writing, rather than d; as plac't, ſnatch't, fiſh't, wak't, dwel't, ſmel't; for plac'd ſnatch'd, fiſh'd, wak'd, dwel'd, ſmel'd; or placed, ſnatched, fiſhed, waked, dwelled, ſmelled.

Thoſe words which terminate in l or ll, or p, make their preterite in t, even in ſolemn language; as crept, felt, dwelt; ſometimes after x, ed is changed into t; as, vext: this is not conſtant.

A long vowel is often changed into a ſhort one; thus, kept, ſlept, wept, crept, ſwept; from the verbs, to keep, to ſleep, to weep, to creep, to ſweep.

Where d or t go before, the additional letter d or t, in this contracted form, coaleſce into one letter with the radical d or t: if t were the radical, they coaleſce into t; but if d were the radical, then into d or t, as the one or the other letter may be more eaſily pronounced: as, read, led, ſpread, ſhed, ſhred, bid, bid, chid, fed, bled, bred, ſped, ſtrid, rid; from the verbs, to read, to lead, to ſpread, to ſhed, to ſhread, to bid, to hide, to chide, to feed, to bleed, to breed, to ſpeed, to ſtride, to ſhide, to ride. And thus, caſt, burt, coſt, burſt, eat, beat, ſweat, ſit, quit, ſmit, writ, bit, bit, met, ſhot; from the verbs, to caſt, to hurt, to coſt, to burſt, to eat, to beat, to ſweat, to ſit, to quit, to ſmite, to write, to bite, to bit, to meet, to ſhoot. And in like manner, lent, ſent, rent, girt; from the verbs, to lend, to ſend, to rend, to gird.

The participle preterite or paſſive is often formed in en, inſtead of ed; as been, taken, given, ſlain, known, from the verbs to be, to take, to give, to ſlay, to know.

Many words have two or more participles, as not only written, bitten, eaten, beaten, bidden, chidden, ſhotten, choſen, broken; but likewiſe writ, bit, eat, beat, bid, chid, ſhot, choſe, broke, are promiſcuouſly uſed in the participle, from the verbs to write, to bite, to eat, to beat, to bide, to chide, to ſhoot, to chooſe, to break, and many ſuch like.

In the ſame manner ſown, ſhewn, hewn, mown, loaden, laden, as well as ſow'd, ſhew'd, hew'd, mow'd, loaded, laded, from the verbs to ſow, to ſhew, to hew, to mow, to load, or lade.

Concerning theſe double participles it is difficult to give any rule; but he ſhall ſeldom err who remembers, that when a verb has a participle diſtinct from its preterite, as write, wrote, written, that diſtinct participle is more proper and elegant, as The book is written, is better than The book is wrote, though wrote may be uſed in poetry.

There are other anomalies in the preterite.

1. Win, ſpin, begin, ſwim, ſtrike, ſtick, ſing, ſting, fling, ring, wring, ſpring, ſwing, drink, ſink, ſhrink, ſtink, come, run, find, bind, grind, wind, both in the preterite imperfect and participle paſſive, give won, ſpun, begun, ſwum, ſtruck, ſtuck, ſung, ſtung, flung, rung, wrung, ſprung, ſwung, drunk, ſunk, ſhrunk, bung, come, run, found, bound, ground, wound. And moſt of them are alſo formed in the preterite by a, as began, rang, ſang, ſprang, drank, came, ran, and ſome others; but moſt of theſe are now obſolete. Some in the participle paſſive likewiſe take en, as ſtricken, ſtrucken, drunken, bounden.

2. Fight, teach, reach, ſeek, beſeech, catch, buy, bring, think, work, make fought, taught, raught, ſought, beſought, caught, bought, brought, thought, wrought.

But a great many of theſe retain likewiſe the regular form, as teached, reached, beſeeched, catched, worked.

3. Take, ſhake, forſake, wake, awake, ſtand, break, ſpeak, bear, ſhear, ſwear, tear, weave, cleave, ſtrive, thrive, drive, ſhine, riſe, ariſe, ſmite, write, bide, abide, ride, chooſe, chuſe, tread, get, beget, forget, ſeethe, make in both preterite and participle took, forſook, woke, awoke, ſtood, broke, ſpoke, bore, ſhore, ſwore, tore, wore, wove, clove, ſtrove, throve, drove, ſhone, roſe, aroſe, ſmote, wrote, bode, abode, rode, choſe, trode, got, begot, forgot, ſod. But we ſay likewiſe, thrive, riſe, ſmit, writ, abid, rid. In the preterite ſome are likewiſe formed by a, as brake, ſpake, bare, ſhare, ſware, tare, ware, clave, gat, begat, forgat, and perhaps ſome others, but more rarely. In the participle paſſive are many of them formed by en, as taken, ſhaken, forſaken, broken, ſpoken, born, ſhorn, ſworn, torn, worn, woven, cloven, thriven, driven, riſen, ſmitten, ridden, choſen, trodden, gotten, begotten, forgotten, ſodden. And many do likewiſe retain the analogy in both, as waked, awaked, ſheared, weaved, leaved, abided, ſeethed.

4. Give, bid, ſit, make in the preterite gave, bade, ſate; in the participle paſſive, given, bidden, ſitten; but in both bid.

5. Draw, know, grow, throw, blow, crow like a cock, fly, ſlay, ſee, ly, make their preterite drew, knew, grew, threw, blew, crew, flew, ſlew, ſaw, lay; their participles paſſive by n, drawn, known, ſhown, grown, thrown, blown, flown, ſlain, ſeen, lien, lain. Yet from flee is made fled; from go, went, from the old wend, and the participle gone.

Of

Of DERIVATION.

That the English language may be more easily understood, it is necessary to enquire how its derivative words are deduced from their primitives, and how the primitives are borrowed from other languages. In this enquiry I shall sometimes copy Dr Wallis, and sometimes endeavour to supply his defects, and rectify his errours.

Nouns are derived from verbs.

The meaning implied in the verb as done or produced, is commonly either the present of the verb; as, to love, love; to fright, a fright; to fight, a fight, or the preterite of the verb, as, to strike, I struck or struck, a stroke.

The action is the same with the participle present, as loving, frighting, fighting, striking.

The agent, or person acting, is denoted by the syllable er added to the verb, as lover, frighter, striker.

Substantives, adjectives, and sometimes other parts of speech, are changed into verbs; in which case the vowel is often lengthened, or the consonant softened, as, a house, to house; brass, to braze; glass, to glaze, grass, to graze; price, to prize; breath, to breathe; a fish, to fish; oyl, to oyl; further, to further; forward, to forward; hinder, to hinder.

Sometimes the termination en is added, especially to adjectives; as, haste, to hasten; length, to lengthen; strength to strengthen; short, to shorten; fast, to fasten; white, to whiten; black, to blacken, hard, to harden; soft, to soften.

From substantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination y, as, a louse, lousy; wealth, wealthy; health, healthy, might, mighty; worth, worthy; wit, witty; lust, lusty; water, watery; earth, earthy, wood, a wood, woody; air, airy, a heart, hearty; a hand, handy.

From substantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination ful, denoting abundance; as, joy, joyful; trust, trustful; youth, youthful; care, careful; use, useful; delight, delightful; plenty, plentiful; help, helpful.

Sometimes, in almost the same sense, but with some kind of diminution thereof, the termination some is added, denoting something, or in some degree; as, delight, delightsome; game, gamesome, irk, irksome; burden, burdensome; trouble, troublesome; light, lightsome; hand, handsome; alone, lonesome; toil, toilsome.

On the contrary, the termination less added to substantives, makes adjectives signifying want, as worthless, witless, heartless, joyless, careless, helpless. Thus comfort, comfortless; sap, sapless.

Privation or contrariety is very often denoted by the particle un prefixed to many adjectives, or in before words derived from the Latin; as, pleasant, unpleasant; wise, unwise, profitable, unprofitable; patient, impatient. Thus unworthy, unhealthy, unfruitful, unuseful, and many more.

Un is but as we often borrow from [illegible] signifying privation, as [illegible] parable particles un and in have [illegible] to confusion, from which it is not easy to disentangle [illegible].

Un is prefixed to all words originally English, as untrue, untruth, [illegible] made privative adjectives, as un- [illegible].

Un ought never to be prefixed to a participle present, to mark a forbearance of action, as unfighting, but a privation of habit, as un- [illegible].

Un is prefixed to most substantives which have an English termination, as unfortunefs, unperfectnefs, which, if they have borrowed terminations, take in or im, as infertility, imperfection; inhuman, inequality; impolite, impiety.

In borrowing adjectives, if we receive them already compounded, it is usual to retain the particle prefixed as inferior, incongruous, improper, but if we borrow the adjective, and add the privative particle, we commonly prefix un, as unpolite, ungallant.

The prepositive particles dis and mis, derived from the des and mes of the French, signify almost the same as un; yet dis rather imports contrariety than privation, since it answers to the Latin preposition de. Mis insinuates some error, and for the most part may be rendered by the Latin words male or perperam. To like, to dislike; honour, dishonour; to honour, to grace, to dishonour, to disgrace; to deign, to disdeign; chance, hap, mischance, mishap; to take, to mistake; deed, misdeed; to use, to misuse; to employ, to misemploy; to apply, to misapply.

Words derived from Latin written with de or dis retain the same signification, as distinguish, distinguo; des- [illegible].

The termination ly added to substantives, and sometimes to adjectives, forms adjectives that import some kind of similitude or agreement, being formed by contraction of like or like.

A giant, giantly, giantlike; earth, earthly; heaven, heavenly; world, worldly; God, godly; good, goodly.

The same termination ly added to adjectives, forms adverbs of like significations; as, beautiful, beautifully; sweet, sweetly; that is, in a beautiful manner; with some [illegible].

The termination ish added to adjectives, imports diminution; and added to substantives, imports similitude or tendency to a character; as, green, greenish; white, whitish; soft, softish; a thief, thievish; a wolf, wolvish; a child, childish.

We have forms of diminutives in substantives, though not frequent; as, a hill, a hillock; a cock, a cockrel; a pike, pickrel, this is a French termination: a goose, a gosling, this is a German termination: a lamb, a lambkin; a chick, a chicken; a man, a manikin; a pipe, a pipkin; and thus Hankin, whence the patronimick Hawkins, Wilkin, Thomkin, and others.

Yet still there is another form of diminution among the English by lessening the sound itself, especially of vowels or augmenting them by euantgoy, or even length sometimes not so much by change of the letters [illegible] nation, as, sop, sip, soop, sup, spot, where, besides of the vowel there is added the French termination et. So fat, fate, vade, vain, heavy, heavie, great pronounced long, a [illegible] ang, eang, iang, imports a succession of smaller and then greater sounds; and so in jingle, jangle, tingle, tangle, and many other made words.

Much however of this is arbitrary and fanciful, depending nobly on oral utterance, and therefore scarcely worthy the notice of writers.

Of concrete adjectives are made abstract substantives, by adding the termination ness, and a few in hood or head, noting character or qualities; as, white, whiteness; hard, hardness; great, greatness; skilful, skilfulness, unskilfulness, godhead, manhood, maidenhead, widowhood, knighthood, priesthood, likenhood, falsehood.

There are other abstracts, partly derived from adjectives, and partly from verbs, which are formed by the addition of the termination th, a small change being sometimes made; as, long, length; strong, strength; broad, wide, breadth, width; deep, depth; true, truth, warm, warmth, dear, dearth; slow, sloth; merry, mirth; heal, health, wel, weal, wealth, dry, drought, young, youth, and so moon, month.

Like these are some words derived from verbs; dy, death, toil, toil; grow, growth; mow, later mowth, after mow'th; commonly spoken and written later math, after math, steal, stealth, bear, birth, rue, ruth; and probably earth from to ear or plow; fly, flight; weigh, weight; fray, fright; to draw, draught.

These should rather be written flighth, frighth, only that custom prevails, left h should be twice repeated.

The same form retain faith, spight, breathe, wrath, broth, froth, breath, sooth, worth, light, weight, and the like, whose primitives are [illegible] from fey or foy, spry, wary, wreak, brew, mow, fry, bray, jar, work.

Some ending in ship imply an office, employment, or condition; as, kingship, wardship, guardianship, partnership, fellowship, ownership.

Thus worship, that is, worthship; whence worshipful, to worship.

Some few ending in dom, rick, wick, do especially denote dominion, at least state or condition; as kingdom, dukedom, earldom, princedom, popedom, christendom, freedom, wisdom, whoredom, bishoprick, bailiwick.

Ment and age are plainly French terminations, and are of the same import with us as among them, scarcely ever occuring, except in words derived from the French, as commandment, usage.

A GRAMMAR OF THE

There are in English great many tribes of words allied by their meaning and derivation; as, to beat, a bat, baton, a fan, a beetle, a [illegible] food. All these are of similar signification, and perhaps derived from the Latin baculo. Thus take, touch, tickle, tack, tackle, all imply a local conjunction, from the Latin tango, tetigi, tactum.

From two are formed twain, twice, twenty, twelve, twine, twirl, [illegible]

The following remarks, extracted from Wallis, are ingenious, but of more subtlety than soundness, and such as perhaps might in every language be enlarged without end.

Sn usually implies the nose, and what relates to it. From the Latin nasus are derived the French nez and the English nose, and nesse, a promontory, as projecting like a nose. But as if from the consonants sn taken from nasus, and transposed, that they may the better correspond, fn denotes nasus; and thence are derived many words that relate to the nose, as snout, sneeze, sneer, snort, snear, snicker, sneak, sneasel, snite, snuff, snuffle, snaffle, snarle, snudge.

There is another sn, which may perhaps be derived from the Latin fumo, as snake, sneak, snail, snare; so likewise snap and snatch, sneeze, snub.

Bl implies a blast; as, blow, blast, to blast, to blight, and, metaphorically, [illegible] look bleak or weather beaten, bleak, bony, bleach, bluster, blurt, to flare, blush, bladder, bleb, blister, blabber-lipped, blubber-cheeked, bloated, blate hearings, bluff, blouze, to blear, that is, blossom, bloom, and perhaps

In the native words of our tongue is to be found a great agreement between the letters and the thing signified; and therefore the sounds of letters smaller, sharper, louder, closer, softer, stronger, clearer, more obscure, and more fridulous, do very often intimate the like effects in the things signified.

Thus words that begin with sl intimate the force and effect of the thing signified, as if probably derived from σφαλω, or sferuo; as, sling, strength, stress, strike, streake, strive, stripe, prize, bruise, struggle, stroke, strut, stretch, strait, strict, straight, that is, narrow, distress, stress, distrest, string, strap, stream, streamer, strano, stirp, stray, straggle, strange, strize, straddle

[illegible]

cated, rather than acquire any new degree, as if it were derived from the Latin flo. For example, stand, stay, that is, to remain, or to prop; stop, stay, that is, to oppose; step, to staff, to fix, to stay, that is, to stop, a stay, that is, an obstacle, stick, stem, stutter, stammer, stagger, stickle, stick, stake, a sharp pale, and any thing deposited at play, stock, stem, stag, to stag, stink, stitch, stud, stanchion, stub, stubble, to stub up, stump, whence stumble, stalk, to stalk, step, to stamp with the feet, whence to stamp, that is, to make an impression and a stamp, stow, to stow, to bestow, steward or steward, stead, steady, steadfast, stable, a stable, a stall, to stall, steel, stall, still, stall, stout, stallion, stiff, stark-dead to starve with hunger or cold, stare, steel, stern, stanch, to stanch blood, to stare, steep, staple, stem, standard, a fixed measure, stately. In all these, and perhaps some others, st denotes something firm and fixed.

Tr implies a more violent degree of motion, as throw, thrust, throng, throb, strange, thrust, threaten, thrash, thrive.

Tw imply some sort of obliquity or distortion, as twist, to wreathe, twill, wrestle, wring, wrong, wrinkle, wrench, wrangle, wrinkle.

Sw imply a strong agitation, or a softer kind of lateral motion, as sway, sway, to sway, swinge, sweep, sweat, swarm, swell, swim,

Nor is there much difference of sm in smootle, smug, smile, smirk, smite, which signifies the same as to strike, but is a softer word. Smart, smell, smack, smother, smart. A smart blow properly signifies such a kind of stroke as with an originally silent motion implied in sm, proceeds by s

Cl denote a kind of adhesion or tenacity, as in cleave, clay, cling, climb, crumber, clammy, clasp, to clasp, to grasp, to climb, clank, cag, clote, to clote, a clod, a clot, as a clot of blood, clouted cream, a clut-

[illegible]

one, particularly if there be an r, as if it were from spargo or sperno; for example, spread, spring, sprig, sprout, sprinkle, split, splinter, spill, spit, spatter, sputter.

Sl denotes a kind of silent fall, or a less observable motion; as in slime, slide, slip, slipper, sly, sleight, slit, slow, slack, sluggot, sling,

[illegible] wise sh, as in crush, rush, gush, flush, clash, lash, flash,

But sh, as in crush, rush, gush, flush, brush, bush, push, implies something as acting more obtusely and dully. Yet in both there is indicated a swift and sudden motion, not instantaneous, but gradual, by the continued sound sh.

Ing as in sing, sing, ding, swing, sling, fling, string, sting, the singing of the termination ng, and the sharpness of the vowel i, imply the continuation of a very slender motion or tremor, at length indeed vanishing, but not suddenly interrupted. But as in sink, clink, sink, clink, think, that end in a mute consonant, there is also indicated a sudden ending.

If there be an l, as in jingle, tingle, tinkle, mingle, sprinkle, trinkle, there is implied a frequency, or iteration of small acts. And the same frequency of acts, but less subtile by reason of the clearer vowel a, is intimated in jangle, tangle, dangle, mangle, wrangle, brangle, dangle, as also in mumble, grumble, jumble, tumble, stumble, rumble, crumble, fumble. But at the same time the close e implies something obscure or obtunded, and a congeries of consonants mbl,

Th denotes a confused kind of rolling or tumbling motion, as in tumble, trundle, trample, trouble, rumble; but in these r is something acute.

In tinkle, the acuteness of the vowel denotes celerity. In sparkle, sp denotes dissipation, ar an acute crackling, k a sudden interruption, l a frequent iteration, and in like manner in sprinkle. where n may imply the subtilty of the dissipated guttules. Flick and flirt differ, in that the former ends with an obtuse consonant, and the later with an acute.

In like manner, in squeak, squeak, squeal, squall bruul, scrawl, yawl, spaul, screek, shriek, shrew, shrew, shrewd, wrinkle, crack, crash, clash, gnash, plash, crush, hush, bush, fish, fizz, hurl, purr, hurl, curl, whirl, hum, hustle, sputter, dawdle, twine, twirl, and in many more, we may observe the agreement of such sort of sounds with the things signified: and this so frequently happens, that scarce any language which I know can be compared with ours. So that one monosyllable word, of which kind are almost all ours, emphatically expresses what in other languages can scarce be explained but by compounds, or decompounds, or sometimes a tedious circumlocution.

We have many words borrowed from the Latin; but the greatest part of them were communicated by the intervention of the French; as grace, face, elegant, elegance, resemble.

Some verbs, which seem borrowed from the Latin, are formed from the present tense, and some from the supines.

From the present are formed spend, expend, expendo; conduce, conduco, despise, despicio; approve, approbo; conceive, concipio.

From the supines, supplicate, supplico; demonstrate, demonstro; dispose, dispono; expatiate, expatior; suppress, suppremo; exempt, eximo.

Nothing is more apparent, of originals. Many of th
scendents from the Latin, are apparently French, as con

Some words purely French, not derived from the Latin, we have transferred into our language; as, garden, garter, buckler, to advance, to cry, to plead, from the French jardin, jartier, bouclier, avancer, cryer, plaider; though indeed, even of these, part is of Latin orig

As to many words which we have in common with the Germans, it is doubtful, whether the old Teutons borrowed them from the Latins, or the Latins from the Teutons, or both had them from some common original; as, wine, vinum; wind, ventus; way, via; wall, vallum; weather, ver worm, vermis; worth, virtus, wasp, vespa; day, [illegible] tame, domo, δαμάω, yoke, iugum, ζυγος; over, upper, super, ὑπερ, arm, ferm, ἁρμος; break, frango, fr. volo, frons, flo. I make no doubt but the Teutonick is more ancient than the Latin: and it is no less certain, that the Latin, which borrowed a great many words, not only from the Greek especially the Æolick, but other neighbouring languages, as the Oscan and others, which have long become obsolete, received not a few from the Teutonick. It is certain, that the English, German, and other Teutonick languages, retained some derived from the Greek which the Latin has not, as path, pfad, ax, axle, axis, ford, pfad, daughter, tochter, mickle, magle, moon, year, grave, graff, to grave, to scrape, nurse, wed, from πατος, ἀξων, μαλα, ανθρωπος, μυκαομαι, μυρια, χηρα, γεφυρα, ἀδελφος. Since they received these immediately from the Greeks, without the intervention of the Latin language, why may not other words be derived immediately from the same fountain, though they be likewise found among the Latins.

Our ancestors were studious to form borrowed words, however long, into monosyllables; and not only cut off the formative terminations, but cropped the first syllable, especially in words beginning with a vowel; and rejected not only vowels in the middle, but likewise consonants of a weaker sound, retaining the stronger, which seem the bones of words, or changing them for others of the same organ, in order that the sound might become the softer; but especially transposing their order, that they might the more readily be pronounced without the intermediate vowels. For example, in expendo, spend; exemplum, sample, excipio, scape; extraneus, strange, extractum, stretch'd; excrucio, to screw; exscorio, to scour; excorio, to scourge; excortico, to scratch; and others beginning with ex as also, emendo, to mend; episcopus, bishop; in Danish Bisp; epistola, pistle; hospitale, spittle, Hispania, Spain; historia, story.

Many of these etymologies are doubtful, and some evidently [illegible]

The following are somewhat harder, Alexander, Sandy, Lexy, as, lee; after, [illegible] f passing into v, as in bye-up, and by cutting off n from the beginning, which is reflored in the middle, but for the old bar or bare, we now fay barn, as for lang, long; for tain, tame, for flane, flone; agrigna, branch. p being changed into b, and r tranſpoſed, as in aper, and g changed into c, as in pignus, pawn, lege, law; vulpes, fox, cutting off the beginning, and changing p into f, as in pellis, a fell; pullus, a foal, pater, father, pavor fear; polio, file, pleo, replico. fill, full, pilcus, pfo; and tranſpoſing s into the middle, which was taken from the ſecond annex, a horſe, peak, bike; zophorus, freeze, nullem, ſum defen fence; dispenſator, ſpruce; afcu to, encounter, Fr ſcout; excalpo ſcrape, retaining l inſtead of r, and hence ſcrip, ſcribe, ſcrawl; excu po, ſcoop, exterritus, ſtart; exton us, attonitus, ſtound'd; ſto machus, mouth; offendo, fiend, obſtupo, ſtop; audere, dare, dare, ware, whence a-ware, be-ware, wary, wares, warning, for the Latin v conſonant formerly ſounded like our w, and the modern ſound of the v conſonant was formerly that of the letter f, that is, the Æolick digamma, which had the ſound of φ, and the modern ſound of the letter f was that of the Greek φ or ph; ulcus, ulcer, ſore, and hence ſorry, ſorrow, ſorrowful, ingenium, ex-

Some may ſeem harſher yet may not be rejected for at leaſt appears that ſome of them are derived from proper names, and there are others whoſe etymology is acknowledged by every body;

beth, Elizabeth, Eliſabeth Betty, Beſs; Margareta, Margaret, Marjorie, Meg, Peg; Maria, Mare, Mat Pat, Mallin, Marium Marabel; Matthæus, Matteus, Matthew; Martha, Matt Pat; Gulielmus, Williamus, Guillaume, Gulliame, William, Will, Bill, Wilkin, Liam, Wicks, Weeks

Thus caryophyllus, flos; gerofilo, Ital. garofle, giloſer, Fr gilo-

month July; petroſelinum, parſly, portulaca, purſlain, cycloma, they corrupt to ring, as if it took its name from the ear, annulus genialis, a gimmal or gimbal ring, and thus the word gimbal and choſen, a chooſer. Since the origin of theſe, and many others, however forced, is evident, it ought to appear no wonder to any one if the ancients have thus diſfigured many, eſpecially as they ſo much affected monoſyllables; and to make them ſound the ſofter, took the liberty of maiming, taking away, changing, tranſpoſing, and lengthening them.

But while we derive theſe from the Latin, I do not mean to ſay, that many of them did not immediately come to us from the Saxon, Danish, Dutch, and Teutonick languages, and other dialects, and ſome taken more lately from the French or Italians, or Spaniards

The ſame word, according to its different ſignifications, often has a different origin, as to bear a burden, from fero, but to bear whence birth, born, burn comes from pario, and a bear, at leaſt it may be of Latin original, from fera. Thus perch, a fiſh from perca, but perch, a meaſure, from pertica, and likewiſe to perch. To ſpell is from ſyllaba, but ſpell an incantment, by which it is believed that the boundaries are ſo fixed in ſands, that none can paſs them againſt the maſter's will, from expello; and ſpell, a meſſenger from epiſtola; whence goſpel, good ſpell, or god-ſpell. Thus freeze, or freeze, from frigeſco, but freeze, an architectonic word, from ephorus, but freeze, for cloth, from Friſia, or perhaps from frigeſco, as being more fit than any other for keeping out the cold.

There are many words among us even monoſyllables, compounded of two or more words, at leaſt ſerving inſtead of compounds, and comprehending the ſignification of more words than one, as: from ſpe and will comes free; from proud and dance, prance; from ſt of the verb ſtay, or ſtand and ſtout, is made ſtout; from ſtout and hardy, ſturdy, from ſp of ſpit or ſpew, and out, comes ſpout; from the ſame ſp, with the termination in, is ſpin, and adding out ſpin out and from the ſame ſp, with it is ſpit, which only differs from ſpout in that it is ſmaller, and with leſs noiſe and force, but ſputter is, becauſe of the obſcure u, ſomething between ſpit and ſpout; and by reaſon of adding r, it intimates a frequent iteration and noiſe, but obſcurely confuſed. Whereas ſparkle, on account of the ſharper and clearer vowel a, intimates a more diſtinct noiſe, to which it chiefly differs from ſputter. From the ſame ſp, and the termination ark, comes ſpark, ſignifying a ſingle emiſſion of fire with a noiſe; namely ſp the emiſſion, or the more acute noiſe, and k, the mute c.

made the frequentative ſparkle. The ſame ſp, by adding r, that ſpr, imports a more lively impetus of diffuſing or expanding itſelf; gout ſpr imports, its ſharpneſs the termination ng, and aſſy n acute and tremulous, ends in the mute conſonant g, denotes the ſudden ending of any motion, that it is meant in its primary ſignification, of a ſingle, not a complicated exertion. Hence we call ſpring whatever has an elaſtick force, as alſo a fountain of water, and thence the origin of any thing; and to ſpring, to germinate; and ſpring, one of the four ſeaſons. From the ſame ſpr and out, is formed ſprout, and with the termination ig, ſpring, of which the following, for the moſt part, is the difference: ſprout, of a groſſer ſound, imports a fatter or groſſer bud; ſpring of a ſlenderer ſound, denotes a ſlender ſhoot. In like manner, from ſtr of the verb ſtrive, and out, comes ſtrout and ſtrut. From the ſame ſtr, and the termination ggle is made ſtruggle, and this gl imports, but without any great noiſe, by reaſon of the obſcure ſound of the vowel u. In like manner, from throw and roll is made trull; and almoſt in the ſame ſenſe as trundle from throw or thruſt and rundle. Thus graff or greugh is compounded of grave and rough, and trudge from tread or trot, and dudge.

In theſe obſervations it is eaſy to diſcover great ſagacity and great extravagance, an ability to do much defeated by the deſire of doing more than enough. It may be remarked,

1. That Wallis's derivations are often ſo made, that by the ſame licence any language may be deduced from any other.

2. That he makes no diſtinction between words immediately derived by us from the Latin, and thoſe which being copied from other languages, can therefore afford no example of the genius of the Engliſh language, or its laws of derivation.

3. That he derives from the Latin, often with great harſhneſs and violence, words apparently Teutonick; and therefore, according to his own declaration, probably older than the tongue to which he refers them.

4. That ſome of his derivations are apparently erroneous.

SYNTAX.

The eſtabliſhed practice of grammarians requires that I ſhould here treat of the Syntax; but our language has ſo little inflection, ſo little variety of terminations, that its conſtruction neither requires nor admits many rules. Wallis therefore has totally omitted it; and Johnſon, whoſe deſire of following the writers upon the learned languages made him think a ſyntax indiſpenſably neceſſary, has publiſhed ſuch petty obſervations as were better omitted.

The verb, as in other languages, agrees with the nominative in number and perſon, as, Thou flieſt from good; He runs to death.

Our adjectives and pronouns are invariable.

Of two ſubſtantives the noun poſſeſſive is the genitive, as, His father's glory, The ſun's heat.

Verbs tranſitive require an oblique caſe; as, He loves me; You fear him.

All prepoſitions require an oblique caſe: He gave this to me; He took this from me; He ſays this of me; He came with me.

PROSODY.

It is common for thoſe that deliver the grammar of modern languages, to omit their Proſody. So that of the Italians is neglected by Buommattei; that of the French by Deſmarais; and that of the Engliſh by Wallis, Cooper, and even by Johnſon though a poet. But as the laws of metre are included in the idea of a grammar, I have thought it proper to inſert them.

Proſody comprises orthoepy, or the rules of pronunciation; and orthometry, or the laws of verſification.

PRONUN-

PRONUNCIATION is juſt, when every letter has its proper ſound, and when every ſyllable has its proper accent, or which in Engliſh verſification is the ſame, its proper quantity.

The ſounds of the letters have been already explained; and rules for the accent or quantity are not eaſy to be given, being ſubject to innumerable exceptions. Such however as I have read or formed, I ſhall here propoſe.

1. Of diſſyllables formed by affixing a termination, the former ſyllable is commonly accented, as childiſh, kingdom, dáreſt, áfred, tóilſome, lóver, ſcóffer, fáiner, foremoſt, zéalous, fi neſs, góaly, meeky, &c.

2. Diſſyllables formed by prefixing a ſyllable to the radical word, have commonly the accent on the latter; as, to begét, to beſeem, to beſtow.

3. Of diſſyllables, which are at once nouns and verbs, the verb has commonly the accent on the latter, and the noun on the former ſyllable; as, to deſcánt, a deſcant; to cement, a cément, to contráct, a cóntract.

This rule has many exceptions. Though verbs ſeldom have the accent on the former, yet nouns often have it on the latter ſyllable as, delight, perfume.

4. All diſſyllables ending in y, as cranny; in our, as labour, favour; in ow, as to ſow, willow, except allow; in le, as bu.tle, bible; in ſh, as baniſh; in ck, as cámbrick, cóquet, in ter, as to batter, in age, as cóurage; in en, as faſten, in et, as quiet, accent the former ſyllable.

5. Diſſyllable nouns in er, as cánker, bútter, have the accent on the former ſyllable.

6. Diſſyllable verbs terminating in a conſonant and e final, as compríſe, eſcápe, or having a diphthong in the laſt ſyllable, as appéaſe, revéal, or ending in two conſonants, as attend; have the accent on the latter ſyllable.

7. Diſſyllable nouns having a diphthong in the latter ſyllable, have commonly their accent on the latter ſyllable, as applauſe; except words in ain, cértain, móuntain.

8. Triſſyllables formed by adding a termination, or prefixing a ſyllable, retain the accent of the radical word, as lóvelineſs, tenderneſs, contémner, vúgrimer, phyſical, he patter, commenting, commending, aſſurance.

9. Triſſyllables ending in ous, as grácious, árdnous; in al, as cápital, in ion, as méntion, accent the firſt.

10. Triſſyllables ending in ce, ent, and ate, accent the firſt ſyllable, as countenance, cóntinence, ármament, immineney regant, propagate, except they be derived from words having the accent on the laſt, as connivence, acquaintance; or the middle ſyllable hath a vowel before two conſonants, as promiſcu.

11. Triſſyllables ending in y, as enmity, ſpe. fy, liberty, victory, ſudſby, commonly accent the firſt ſyllable.

12. Triſſyllables in re or le accent the firſt ſyllable, as legion, theatre, except eſcape, and ſome words which have a poſition, as exámple, epiſtle.

13. Triſſyllables in ude commonly accent the firſt ſyllable, as pónitude.

14. Triſſyllables ending in ator or atour, as créator, or having in the middle ſyllable a diphthong, as endeatour; or a vowel before two conſonants, as domeſtick, accent the middle ſyllable.

15. Triſſyllables that have their accent on the laſt ſyllable are commonly French, as acquieſce, repartée, magazine, or words formed by prefixing one or two ſyllables to an acute ſyllable, as immature, overcharge.

16. Polyſyllables, or words of more than three ſyllables, follow the accent of the words from which they are derived, as arrogating, cóntinency, incónſtantly, commendable, communicableneſs.

17. Words in ion have the accent upon the antepenult, as ſalvátion, perturbátion, concóction; words in atour or ator on the penult, as deáctor.

18. Words ending in le commonly have the accent on the firſt ſyllable, as ámicable, unleſs the ſecond ſyllable have a vowel before two conſonants, as com-

19. Words ending in ous have the accent on the antepenult, as uxorious, voluptuous.

20. Words ending in ty have their accent on the antepenult, as poſſeſſanimity, ability.

[illegible] out pro-
[illegible] as in other tongues much muſt be earned
[illegible] Perhaps more and better rules may be

VERSIFICATION is the arrangement of a certain number of ſyllables according to certain laws.

The feet of our verſes are either iambick, as alóft, creáte; or trochaick, as hóly, lófty.

Our iambick meaſure compriſes verſes

Of four ſyllables,

Moſt good, moſt fair,
Or things as rare,
To call you's oft;
For all the coſt
Words can beſtow,
So poorly ſhow
Upon your praiſe,
That all the ways
Senſe hath, come ſhort. Drayton.

With ravi.h'd ears
The monarch hears. Dryden.

Of ſix,

This while we are abroad,
Shall we not touch our lyre?
Shall we not ſing an ode?
Shall that holy fire,
In us t at ſtrongly glow'd,
In this cold air expire?

Though in the utmoſt Peak
A while we do remain,
Amongſt the mountains bleak,
Expos'd to ſleet and rain,
No ſport our hours ſhall break,
To exerciſe our vein.

Who though bright Phœbus' beams
Refreſh the ſouthern ground,
And though the princely Thames
With beauteous nymphs abound,
And by old Camber's ſtreams
Be many wonders found,

Yet many rivers clear
Here glide in ſilver ſwathes,
And what of all moſt dear,
Buxton's delicious baths,
Strong ale and noble chear,
T' aſſwage breem winter's ſcathes.

In places far or near,
Or famous, or obſcure,
Where wholeſom is the air,
Or where the moſt impure,
All times, and every where,
The muſe is ſtill in ure. Drayton.

Of eight, which is the uſual meaſure for ſhort poems,

And may at laſt my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown, and moſſy cell,
Where I may ſit, and nightly ſpell
Of ev'ry ſtar the ſky doth ſhew,
And ev'ry herb that ſips the dew. Milton.

Of ten, which is the common meaſure of heroick and tragick poetry.

Full in the midſt of this created ſpace,
Betwixt heav'n, earth, and ſkies, there ſtands a place
Confining on all three; with triple bound;
Whence all things, though remote, are view'd around,
And thither bring their undulating ſound
The palace of loud Fame, her ſeat of pow'r,
Plac'd on the ſummit of a lofty tow'r;
A thouſand winding entries long and wide
Receive of freſh reports a flowing tide

A thousand crannies in the walls are made;
Nor gate nor bars exclude the busy trade.
'Tis built of brass, the better to diffuse
The spreading sounds, and multiply the news;
Where echo's in repeated echo's play:
A mart for ever full; and open night and day.
Nor silence is within, nor voice express,
But a deaf noise of sounds that never cease,
Confus'd, and chiding like the hollow roar
Of tides, receding from th' insulted shore;
Or like the broken thunder, heard from far,
When Jove to distance drives the rolling war
The courts are fill'd with a tumultuous din
Of crouds, or issuing forth, or entring in
A thorough fare of news; where some devise
Things never heard, some mingle truth with lie
The troubled air with empty sounds they beat,
Intent to hear, and eager to repeat Dryden.

In all these measures the accents are to be placed on even syllables, and every Line considered by itself is more harmonious, as this rule is more strictly observed

Our trochaick measures are

Of three syllables,

Here we may
Think and pray,
Before death
Stops our breath:
Other joys
Are but toys.

Of five,

In the days of old,
Stories plainly told,
Lovers felt annoy.

Of seven,

Fairest piece of weakform'd earth,
Urge not thus your haughty birth.

In these measures the accent is to be placed on the odd syllables

These are the measures which are now in use, and above the rest those of seven, eight, and ten syllables. Our ancient poets wrote verses sometimes of twelve syllables, as Drayton's Polyolbion

Of all the Cambrian shires their heads that bear so high,
And farth'st survey their sons with an ambitious eye,
Mervinia for her hills, as for their matchless crowds,
The neareſt that are said to kiss the wand'ring clouds,
Especial audience craves, offended with the throng,
That she of all the rest neglected was so long,
Alledging for herself, when through the Saxons pride,
The godlike race of Brute to Severn's setting side
Were cruelly inforc'd, her mountains did relieve
Those whom devouring war else every where did grieve
And when all Wales beside by fortune or by might,
Unto her ancient foe resign'd her ancient right,
A constant maiden still she only did remain,
The last her genuine laws which stoutly did retain
And as each one is prais'd for her peculiar things
So only she is rich, in mountains, meres, and springs,
And holds herself as great in her superfluous wealth,
As others by their towns, and fruitful tillage great

And of fourteen, as Chapman's Homer

And as the mind of such a man, that hath a long way
And rather knoweth not a way, or sure would let
His purpos'd journey, is distract.

The verse of twelve lines, called an Alexandrine, is now only to diversify stanzas.

Waller was smooth but Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full resounding line,
The long majestick march, and energy divine

The pause in the Alexandrine must be at the sixth syllable

The verse of fourteen syllables is now broken into a soft kind measure of verses, consisting alternately of eight and six

She to receive thy radiant name,
Selects a whiter space

When all shall praise, and every lay
Devote a wreath to thee
That day, for come it will, that day
Shall lament to see

We have another measure very quick and lively, and therefore much used in songs, which may be called the anapestick, in which the accent rests upon every third syllable.

May I govern my passions with absolute sway,

In this measure a syllable is often retrenched from the first foot, as

Diogenes surly and proud

I think not of his, nor I his of me.

These measures are varied by many combinations, and sometimes by double endings, either with or without rhyme, as in the heroick

'Tis heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man

So in that of eight syllables,

They neither added nor confounded,
They neither wanted nor abounded

In that of seven,

For resistance I could fear none,
But with twenty ships had done,
What thou, brave and happy Vernon,
Hast atchiev'd with six alone

In that of six,

'Twas when the seas were roaring,
With hollow blasts of wind,
A damsel lay deploring
All on a rock reclin'd

In the anapestick,

When terrible tempests assail us,
And mountainous billows affright,
Nor power nor wealth can avail us,
But sinful industry steers right

To these measures, and their laws, may be reduced every species of English verse

Our versification admits of few licences, except a synalepha, or elision of e in the before a vowel, as th'eternal; and more rarely of o in to, as t'accept, and a synæresis, by which two short vowels coalesce into one syllable, as question, special; or a word is contracted by the expulsion of a short vowel before a liquid, as av'rice, temp'rance.

Thus have I collected rules and examples, by which the English language may be learned, if the reader be already acquainted with grammatical terms, or taught by a master to those that are more ignorant. To have written a grammar for such as are not yet initiated in the schools, would have been tedious, and perhaps at last

A GENERAL DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

A B A

A, The first letter of the European alphabets, has, in the English language, three different sounds, which may be termed the broad, open, and slender.

The broad sound resembling that of the German a is found, in many of our monosyllables, as all, wall, malt, salt, in which a is pronounced as au in cause, or aw in law. Many of these words were anciently written with au, as fault, waulk; which happens to be still retained in fault. This was probably the ancient sound of the Saxons, since it is almost uniformly preserved in the rustic pronunciation, and the Northern dialects, as maun for man, haund for hand.

A open, not unlike the a of the Italians, is found in father, rather, and more obscurely in fancy, fast, &c.

A slender or close, is the peculiar a of the English language, resembling the sound of the French e masculine, or diphthong ai in pais, or perhaps a middle sound between them, or between the a and e, to this the Arabic a is said nearly to approach. Of this sound we have examples in the words, place, face, waste, and all those that terminate in ation; as, relation, nation, generation.

A is short, as, glass, grass, or long, as, glaze, graze it is marked long, generally, by an e final, plane, or by an i added, as, plain.

A, an article set before nouns of the singular number; a man, a tree; denoting the number one, as, a man is coming, that is, no more than one; or an indefinite indication, as, a man may come this way; that is, any man. This article has no plural signification. Before a word beginning with a vowel, it is written an, as, an ox, an egg, of which a is the contraction.

A is sometimes a noun; as, a great A, a little a

A is placed before a participle, or participial noun; and is considered by Wallis as a contraction of at, when it is put before a word denoting some action not yet finished; as, I am a walking. It also seems to be anciently contracted from at, when placed before local surnames, as, Thomas a Becket. In other cases, it seems to signify to, like the French à.

a hunting Cæsar went. Prior.

To a bankrupt's door. Dryd.

May pure contents for ever pitch their tents
Upon these downs, these meads, these rocks, these mountains,
And peace sit sumber by these purling fountains!
Which we may every year
Find when we come a fishing here. Wotton.

Now the men fall a rubbing of armour, which a great while had lain dried; the magazines of munition are viewed; the officers of remains called to account. Wotton.

Another falls a ringing a Pescennius Niger, and judiciously distinguishes the sound of it to be modern. Addison on medals.

A has a peculiar signification, denoting the proportion of one thing to another. Thus we say, The landlord hath a hundred a year, The ship's crew gained a thousand pounds a man.

The river Iser, that had been hitherto shut up among mountains, passes generally through a wide open country, during all its course through Bavaria; which is a voyage of two days, after the rate of twenty leagues a day. Addison on Italy.

A is used in burlesque poetry, to lengthen out a syllable, without adding to the sense

For cloves and nutmegs to the line a,
And even for oranges to China. Dryd.

A is sometimes, in familiar writings, put by a barbarous corruption for he.

A, in composition, seems to have sometimes the power of the French a in these phrases, a droit, a gauche, &c. and sometimes to be contracted from at, as, abide, aslope, afoot, asleep, athirst, aware.

If this, which he avouches, does appear,
There is no flying hence, nor tarrying here.
I grow to be a weary of the sun,
And wish the state of the world were now undone.

And now a breeze from shore began to blow,
The sailors ship their oars, and cease to row,
Then hoist their yards a-trip, and all their sails
Let fall, to court the wind, and catch the gales.

Dryden's Ceyx and Alcyone.

A is sometimes redundant; as, arise, arouse, awake; the same with rise, rouse, wake.

A, in abbreviations, stands for artium, or arts; as, A. B. bachelor of arts, artium baccalaureus; A. M. master of arts, artium magister; or, anno; as, A. D. anno domini.

AB, at the beginning of the names of places, generally shews that they have some relation to an abbey.

ABA'CKE. adv. obsolete. Backwards.

But when they came where thou thy skill didst show,
They drew abacke, as half with shame confound,
Shepherds to see them in their art outgo. Spenf. Past.

ABA CTOR. n. f. [Lat. abactor, a driver away] Those who drive away or steal cattle in herds, or great numbers at once, in distinction from those that steal only a sheep or two. Blount.

A BACUS. n. f. [Lat. abacus]

1. A counting-table, anciently used in calculations.
2. In architecture, it is the uppermost member of a column, which serves as a sort of crowning both to the capital and column. Dict.

ABAFT. adv. [of abæcan, Sax. Behind] From the fore-part of the ship, towards the stern. Dict.

ABAI'SANCE. n. f [from the French abaisser, to depress, to bring down.] An act of reverence, a bow. Obeysance is considered by Skinner as a corruption of abaisance, but is now universally used

To ABALIENATE. v. a. [from abalieno, Lat.] To make that another's which was our own before. Cowel. Law. Jur. A term of the civil law, not much used in common speech.

ABALIENATION. n. f [Lat abalienatio.] A giving up one's right to another person; or a making over an estate, goods, or chattels by sale, or due course of law. Dict.

To ABAND v. a. [A word contracted from abandon, but not now in use. See ABANDON] To forsake.

Those foreigners which came from far
Grew great, and got large portions of land,
That in the realm, ere long, they stronger are
Than they which fought at first their helping hand,
And Vortiger enforced the kingdom to aband.

Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 10.

To ABANDON v. a. [Fr abandonner. Derived, according to Menage, from the Italian abandonare, which signifies to forsake his colours, bandum [vexillum] deserere. Pasquier thinks it if a coalition of a ban donner, to give up to a proscription; in which sense we, at this day, mention the ban of the empire. Ban, in our own old dialect, signifies a curse, and to abandon, if considered as compounded between French and Saxon, is exactly equivalent to diris devovere.]

A B A

1. To give up, resign, or quit; often followed by the particle to.

The passive gods behold the Greeks defile
Their temples, and abandon to the spoil
Their own abodes; we, feeble few, conspire
To save a sinking town, involv'd in fire. Dryd. Æneid.

2. To desert.

The princes acting the passions of fearing evil, and desiring to escape, only to serve the rule of virtue, not to abandon one's self, leapt to a rib of the ship. Sidney, b. ii.

Then being alone,
Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends,
'Tis right, quoth he; thus misery doth part
The flux of company. Shakesp. As you like it.

What fate a wretched fugitive attends,
Scorn'd by my foes, abandon'd by my friends. Dryd. Æn. 2.

3. To forsake, generally with a tendency to an ill sense.

When he in presence came, to Guyon first
He boldly spake, Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestalled place at erst,
For fear of further harm, I counsel thee.
Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant 4. stanz. 39.

But to the parting goddess thus she pray'd,
Propitious shill be present to my aid,
Nor quite abandon your once favour'd maid. Dryd. Fab

To ABANDON OVER. v. a. [a form of writing not usual, perhaps not exact.] To give up to, to resign.

Look on me as a man abandon'd o'er
To an eternal lethargy of love;
To pull, and pinch, and wound me, cannot cure,
And but disturb the quiet of my death. Dryd. Sp. Friar.

ABANDONED. partícip. adj.

1 Given up.

If she be so abandon'd to her sorrow,
As it is spoke, she never will admit me.
Shakesp Twelfth Night.

Who is he so abandoned to foolish credulity, as to think, upon that principle, that a clod of earth in a sack, may ever, by eternal shaking, receive the fabric of man's body?
Bentley's Sermons.

Must he, whose altars on the Phrygian shore,
With frequent rites, and pure, avow'd thy pow'r,
Be doom'd the worst of human ills to prove,
Unbless'd, abandon'd to the wrath of Jove?
Pope's Odyssey, b. i. l. 81.

2 Forsaken, deserted.

3. Corrupted in the highest degree. In this sense, it is a contraction of a longer form, abandoned [given up] to wickedness.

ABANDONING. [A verbal noun from abandon.] Desertion, forsaking.

He hoped his past meritorious actions might outweigh his present, abandoning the thought of future action Clarend. b. viii.

ABANDONMENT. n. s. [from abandon.]

1. The act of abandoning.
2 The state of being abandoned Dict

ABANNI'TION. n. s. [Lat. abannitio.] A banishment for one or two years, among the ancients, for manslaughter. Dict

ABARCY. n. s. Insatiableness. Dict

To ABA'RE. v. a. [abaran, Sax.] To make bare, uncover, or disclose. Dict

ABARTICULA'TION n. s. [from ab, from, and articulus, a joint, Lat.] A good and apt construction of the bones, by which they move strongly and easily; or that species of articulation that has manifest motion. Dict

To ABASE. v. a. [fr. abaisser, from the Lat. basis, or bassus, a barbarous word, signifying low, base.] To cast down, to depress, to bring low, almost always in a figurative and personal sense

Happy shepherd, with thanks to the gods, shall think to be thankful, that to thy advancement their wisdoms have thee abased. Sidney, b. ii.

With unresisted might the monarch reigns;
He levels mountains, and he raises plains,
And, not regarding diff'rence of degree,
Abas'd your daughter, and exalted me. Dryd Fables.

Behold every one that is proud, and abase him. Job, xl 11.

If [illegible] be curbed and humbled too much in children; if their spirits be abased and broken much by too strict an hand over them, they lose all their vigour and industry, and are in a worse state than the former. Locke on Education, § 46

ABA'SED. adj. [with heralds] is a term used of the wings of eagles, when the top looks downwards towards the point of the shield, or when the wings are shut; the natural way of bearing them being spread with the top pointing to the chief of the angle. Bailey. Chambers.

ABA'SEMENT. n. s. The state of being brought low, the act of bringing low; depression.

There is an abasement because of glory; and there is that lifteth up his head from a low estate. Ecclesiasticus, xx. 11

To ABASH. v. a. [See BASHFUL.] To put into confusion; to make ashamed. It generally implies a sudden impression of shame.

They heard, and were abash'd, and up they sprung
Upon the wing. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i. l. 331.

This heard, th' imperious queen sat mute with fear,
Nor further durst incense the gloomy thunderer.
Silence was in the court at this rebuke:
Nor could the gods, abash'd, sustain their sovereign's look.
Dryden's Fables.

The passive admits the particle at, sometimes of, before the causal noun.

In no wise speak against the truth, but be abashed of the error of thy ignorance. Ecclesiasticus, iv 25

I said unto her, from whence is this kid? Is it not stolen? Render it to the owners, for it is not lawful to eat any thing that is stolen. But she replied upon me, it was given for a gift, more than the wages, however, I did not believe her, but bad her render it to the owners and I was abashed at her. Tob. ii. 13, 14.

The little Cupids hov'ring round,
(As pictures prove) with garlands crown'd,
Abash'd at what they saw and heard,
Flew off, nor ever more appear'd. Swift's Miscella.

To ABA'TE. v. a. [from the French abattre, to beat down.]

1. To lessen, to diminish.

Who can tell whether the divine wisdom, to abate the glory of those kings, did not reserve this work to be done by a queen, that it might appear to be his own immediate work?
Sir John Davies on Ireland.

If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
And how unwillingly I left the ring,
You would abate the strength of your displeasure.
Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

Here we see the hopes of great benefit and light from expositors and commentators are in a great part abated, and those who have most need of your help, can receive but little from them, and can have very little assurance of reaching the Apostle's sense, by what they find in them.
Locke's Essay on St Paul's Epistles.

2. To deject, or depress the mind.

This iron world (the same he weeping says)
Brings down the stoutest hearts to lowest state.
For misery doth bravest minds abate. Spens. Hubberd's Tale.

— — — — Have they power still
To banish your defenders, till at length
Your ignorance deliver you,
As most abated captives to some nation
That won you without blows? Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Time that changes all, yet changes us in vain,
The body, not the mind; nor can controul
Th' immortal vigour, or abate the soul. Dryden's Æn.

3. In commerce, to let down the price in selling, sometimes to beat down the price in buying

To ABATE. v. n. To grow less; as, his passion abates; the storm abates. It is used sometimes with the particle of before the thing lessened.

Our physicians have observed, that, in process of time, some diseases have abated of their virulence, and have, in a manner, worn out their malignity, so as to be no longer mortal. Dryden's Hind and Panth.

To ABATE [in common law]

It is in law used both actively and neuterly; as, to abate a castle, to beat it down. To abate a writ, is, by some exception, to defeat or overthrow it. A stranger abateth, that is, entereth upon a house or land void by the death of him that last possessed it, before the heir take his possession, and so keepeth him out. Wherefore, as he that putteth out him in possession, is said to disseise: so he that stepeth in between the former possessor and his heir, is said to abate. In the neuter signification thus; The writ of the demandment shall abate, that is, shall be disabled, frustrated, or overthrown. The appeal abateth by covin, that is, that the accusation is defeated by deceit. Cowel.

To ABATE. [in horsemanship.] A horse is said to abate or take down his curvets; when working upon curvets, he puts his two hind legs to the ground both at once, and observes the same exactness in all the times. Dict.

ABATEMENT n. s. [from abate, Fr.]

1. The act of abating or lessening.

The law of works then, in short, is that law, which requires perfect obedience, without remission or abatement; so that, by that law, a man cannot be just, or justified, without an exact performance of every tittle. Locke.

2. The state of being abated.

Coffee has, in common with all nuts, an oil strongly combined and entangled with earthy particles. The most noxious part of oil exhales in roasting to the abatement of near one quarter of its weight. Arbuthnot on aliments.

3. The sum or quantity taken away by the act of abating.

Xenophon tells us, that the city contained about ten thousand land houſes, and allowing one man to every houſe, who could have any ſhare in the government, (the reſt, conſiſting of women, children and ſervants) and making other obvious abatements, theſe tyrants, if they had been careful to adhere together, might [illegible] even of the people collective. Swift on the conteſts in Athens and Rome.

4. The cauſe of abating, extenuation.

As our advantages towards practiſing and promoting piety and virtue were greater than thoſe of other men; ſo will our excuſe be leſs, if we neglect to make uſe of them. We cannot plead in abatement of our guilt, that we were ignorant of our duty, under the prepoſſeſſion of ill habits, and the bias of a wrong education. Atterbury's Sermons.

ABATEMENT, in law

The act of the abator, as, the abatement of the heir into the land before he hath agreed with the lord. The affection or paſſion of the thing abated, as, abatement of the writ. Cowel.

ABATEMENT, [with heralds] is an accidental mark, which being added to a coat of arms, the dignity of it is abaſed, by reaſon of ſome ſtain or diſhonourable quality of the bearer. Dict.

ABA'TER. n. ſ. The agent or cauſe by which an abatement is procured.

Abaters of acrimony or ſharpneſs expreſſed oils of ripe vegetables, and all preparations of ſuch; as of almonds, piſtachoes, and other nuts. Arbuthnot on diet.

ABA'TOR. n. ſ. [a law term.] One who intrudes into houſes or land, that is void by the death of the former poſſeſſour, as yet not entered upon or taken up by his heir. Dict.

ABATUDE n. ſ. [old records.] Any thing diminiſhed. Bailey.

ABATURE. n. ſ. [a hunting term.] The [illegible] graſs which are thrown down by a ſtag in his paſſing by. Dict.

ABB. n. ſ. The yarn on a weaver's warp; a term among clothiers. Chambers.

ABBA. n. ſ. [Heb. אב] A Syriac word, which ſignifies father.

ABBACY. n. ſ. [Lat. abbatia.] The rights or privileges of an abbot. See ABBEY.

According to Felinus, an abbacy is the dignity itſelf, ſince an abbot is a term or word of dignity, and not of office; and, therefore, even a ſecular perſon, who has the care of ſouls, is ſometimes, in the canon law, alſo ſtiled an abbot.

Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

ABBESS. n. ſ. [Lat. abbatiſſa, from whence the Saxon abbuſſe, then probably abbateſs, and by contraction abbeſſe in Fr. and abbeſs, Eng.] The ſuperiour or governeſs of a nunnery or monaſtery of women.

They fled
Into this abbey, whither we purſued them;
And here the abbeſs ſhuts the gate on us,
And will not ſuffer us to fetch him out.

Shakeſp. Comedy of Errours.

I have a ſiſter, abbeſs in Terceras,
Who loſt her lover on her bridal-day. Dryd. D. Sebaſt.

Conſtantia's heart was ſo elevated with the diſcourſe of Father Francis, that the very next day ſhe entered upon her vow. As ſoon as the ſolemnities of her reception were over, we retired, as it is uſual, with the abbeſs into her own apartment.

Addiſon Spect. N° 164.

ABBEY, or ABBY. n. ſ. [Lat. abbatia; from whence probably firſt ABBACY; which ſee.] A monaſtery of religious perſons, whether men or women; diſtinguiſhed from religious houſes of other denominations by larger privileges. See ABBOT.

With eaſy roads he came to Leiceſter;
Lodg'd in the abbey, where the reverend abbot,
With all his convent, honourably receiv'd him.

Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

ABBEY-LUBBER. n. ſ. [See LUBBER.] A ſlothful loiterer in a religious houſe, under pretence of retirement and auſterity.

Thus is no Father Dominic, no huge overgrown abbey-lubber, this is but a diminutive ſucking friar. Dryd. Sp. Fr.

ABBOT. n. ſ. [in the lower Latin abbas, from אב father, which ſenſe was implied; ſo that the abbots were called patres, and abbeſſes matres monaſterii. Thus Fortunatus to the abbot Paternus: Nomina officium jure, Paterne, geris.] The chief of a convent, or fellowſhip of canons. Of theſe, ſome in England were mitred, ſome not: thoſe that were mitred were exempted from the juriſdiction of the diocеſan, having in themſelves epiſcopal authority within their precincts, and being alſo lords of parliament. The other ſort were ſubject to the diocеſan in all ſpiritual government. Cowel. See ABBEY.

ABBY. See ABBEY.

ABBOTSHIP. n. ſ. The ſtate or privilege of an abbot. Dict.

To ABBREVIATE. v. a. [Lat. abbreviare.]

1. To ſhorten by contraction of parts without loſs of the main ſubſtance.

It is one thing to abbreviate by contracting, another by cutting off. Bacon. Eſſay 26.

The only invention of late years, which hath any way contributed towards politeneſs in diſcourſe, is that of abbreviating or reducing words of many ſyllables into one, by lopping off the reſt. Swift's Introduction to genteel converſation.

2. To ſhorten, to cut ſhort.

Againſt this opinion we may very well ſet the length of their days before the flood; which were abbreviated after, and in half this ſpace contracted into hundreds and threeſcores.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. [illegible]

ABBREVIATION:

1. The act of abbreviating.
2. The means uſed to abbreviate, as characters ſignifying whole words.

Such is the propriety and energy of expreſſion in them all, that they never can be changed, but to diſadvantage, except in the circumſtance of uſing abbreviations.

Swift's Introduction to genteel converſation.

ABBREVIA'TOR. n. ſ. [abbreviateur, Fr.] One who abbreviates, or abridges.

ABBRE'VIATURE. n. ſ. [abbreviatura, Lat.]

1. A mark uſed for the ſake of ſhortening.
2. A compendium or abridgement.

He is a good man, who grieves rather for him that injures him, than for his own ſuffering; who prays for him, that wrongs him, forgiving all his faults; who ſooner ſhews mercy than anger; who offers violence to his appetite, in all things endeavouring to ſubdue the fleſh to the ſpirit. This is an excellent abbreviature of the whole duty of a chriſtian.

Taylor's Guide to devotion.

ABBREUVOI'R. [in French, a watering-place. This word is derived by Menage, not much acquainted with the Teutonic dialects, from adbibare for adbibere, but more probably it comes from the ſame root with brew. See BREW.] It ſignifies, among maſons, the joint or juncture of two ſtones, or the interſtice between two ſtones to be filled up with mortar. Dict.

A, B, C.

And if we abduce the eye unto either corner, the object will not duplicate; for, in that poſition, the axis of the cones remain in the ſame plane, as is demonſtrated in the optics delivered by Galen. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 20.

ABDU'CENT. adj. Muſcles abducent, are thoſe which ſerve to open or pull back divers parts of the body; their oppoſites being called adducent. Dict.

ABDU'CTION. n. ſ. [abductio, Lat.]

1. The act of drawing apart, or withdrawing one part from another.
2. A particular form of argument.

ABDU'CTOR. n. ſ. [abductor, Lat.] The name given by anatomiſts to the muſcles, which ſerve to draw back the ſeveral members.

In purſuance of this theory, he ſuppoſed the conſtrictors of the eyelids muſt be ſtrengthened in the ſupercilious; the abductors in drunkards, and contemplative men, who have the ſame ſteady and grave motion of the eye.

Arbuthnot and Pope's Martinus Scriblerus.

ABECEDA'RIAN n. f. [from the names of a, b, c, the three first letters of the alphabet.] He that teaches or learns the alphabet, or first rudiments of literature.

This word is used by Wood in his Athenæ Oxonienſes, where mentioning Farnaby the critic, he relates, that, in ſome part of his life, he was reduced to follow the trade of an abecedarian by his misfortunes.

ABECEDARY adj. [See ABECEDARIAN.]

1. Belonging to the alphabet.
2. Inſcribed with the alphabet.

This is pretended from the ſympathy of two needles touched with the loadſtone, and placed in the center of two abecedary circles, or rings of letters, deſcribed round about them, one friend keeping one, and another the other, and agreeing upon an hour wherein they will communicate.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 2.

ABE'D. adv. [from a, for at. See (A,) and BED.] In bed.

It was a ſhame for them to mar their complexions, yea and conditions too, with long lying abed, and that, when ſhe was of their age, ſhe trowed, ſhe would have made a handkerchief by that time o' day. Sidney, b. i.

She has not been abed, but in her chapel
All night devoutly watch'd, and brib'd the ſaints
With prayers for her deliverance. Dryd. Span. Friar.

ABERR'ANCE. n. f. [from aberro, Lat. to wander from the right way.] A deviation from the right way; an errour, a miſtake, a falſe opinion.

Could a man be compoſed to ſuch an advantage of conſtitution, that it ſhould not at all adulterate the images of his mind; yet this ſecond nature would alter the craſis of his underſtanding, and render it as obnoxious to aberrances, as now Glanville's Sceptis Scientifica, c. 16.

ABE'RRANCY. The ſame with ABERRANCE.

They do not only ſwarm with errors, but vices depending thereon. Thus they commonly affect no man any farther than he deſerts his reaſon, or complies with their aberrancies.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 3.

ABE'RRANT. adj. [from aberrans, Lat.] Deviating, wandering from the right or known way. Dict.

ABERRA'TION. n. f. [from aberratio, Lat.] The act of deviating from the common track.

And if it be a miſtake, it is only ſo; there is no hereſy in ſuch an harmleſs aberration; at the worſt, with the ingenuous, the probability of it will render it a lapſe of eaſy pardon.

Government of the Tongue, p. 1.

ABE'RRING. part. [from the verb aberr, of aberro, Lat.] Wandering, going aſtray.

Though there were a fatality in this year, yet divers were, and others might be, out in their account, aberring ſeveral ways from the true and juſt compute, and calling that one year, which perhaps might be another.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 12.

Of the verb aberr I have found no example.

To ABERUNCATE. v. a. [averunco, Lat.] To pull up by the roots; to extirpate utterly. Dict.

To ABE'T. v. a. [from betan, Sax. ſignifying to enkindle or animate.] To puſh forward another, to ſupport him in his deſigns by connivance, encouragement, or help. It is generally taken, at leaſt by modern writers, in an ill ſenſe, as may be ſeen in ABETTER.

To abet ſignifieth, in our common law, as much as to encourage or ſet on. Cowel.

Then ſhall I ſoon, quoth he, return again,
Abet that virgin's cauſe diſconſolate,
And ſhortly back return unto this place,
To walk this way in pilgrim's poor eſtate. Fairy Q. b. i.

A widow who by ſolemn vows,
Contracted to me, for my ſpouſe,
Combin'd with him to break her word,
And has abetted all.——— Hudibras, p. iii. cant 3.

Men lay ſo great weight upon their being of right opinions, and their eagerneſs of abetting them, that they account that the unum neceſſarium. Decay of Pi

In the reign of king Charles the firſt, though that prince was married to a daughter of France, and was perſonally beloved and eſteemed in the French court; it is well known that they abetted both parties in the civil war, and always furniſhed ſupplies to the weaker ſide, leaſt there ſhould be an end put to theſe fatal diviſions. Addiſon. Freeholder, N° 28.

ABE'TMENT. n. f. The act of abetting. Dict.

ABE'TTER, or ABE'TTOR. n. f. He that abets; the ſupporter or encourager of another.

You ſhall be ſtill plain Torriſmond with me,
Th' abetter, partner, (if you like the name)
The huſband of a tyrant, but no king,
Till you deſerve that title by your juſtice.

Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

While this ſin of calumny has two ſuch potent abetters, we are not to wonder at its growth as long as men are malicious and deſigning, they will be traducing. Govern. of the Tongue.

Theſe and the like conſiderations, though they may have no influence on the headſtrong unruly multitude, ought to ſuſpend the raſh cenſures of thoſe who are not maſters of them, and who, if they eſcape the puniſhment here due to them, muſt very well know, that theſe ſeveral miſchiefs will be one day laid to their charge. Addiſon. Freeholder, N° 50.

ABEY'ANCE. n. f. [from the French aboyer, aboyer, to bark at.] This word, in Littleton, cap. Diſcontinuance, is thus uſed. The right of fee-ſimple lieth in abeyance, when it is not only in the remembrance, intendment, and conſideration of the law. The frank tenement of the glebe of the parſonage, is in no man during the time that the parſonage is void, but is in abeyance. Cowel.

ABGREGATION. n. f. [abgregatio, Lat.] A ſeparation from the flock. Dict.

To ABHO'R. v. a. [abhorreo, Lat.] To hate with acrimony; to deteſt to extremity, to loath.

Whilſt I was big in clamour, came there a man,
Who having ſeen me in my worſer ſtate,
Shunn'd my abhorr'd ſociety. Shakeſpear's K. Lear.

To whom thus Michael: Juſtly thou abhorr'ſt
That ſon, who on the quiet ſtate of men
Such trouble brought, affecting to ſubdue
Rational liberty Milt. Parad. Loſt, b. xii. l. 79.

The ſelf-ſame thing they will abhor
One way, and long another for. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.

A church of England man abhors the humour of the age, in delegating to fling ſcandals upon the clergy in general, which, beſides the diſgrace to the reformation, and to religion itſelf, caſt an ignominy upon the kingdom that it doth not deſerve.

Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of England man.

ABHO'RRENCE. n. f. [from abhor.]

1. The act of abhorring, deteſtation.

It draws upon him the juſt and univerſal hatred and abhorrence of all men here; and, finally, ſubjects him to the wrath of God, and eternal damnation hereafter. Sanc.'s Serm.

2. The diſpoſition to abhor, hatred.

He knew well that even a juſt and neceſſary offence does, by giving men acquaintance with war, take off ſomewhat from the abhorrence of it, and inſenſibly diſpoſe them to farther hoſtilities. Decay of Piety.

ABHO'RRENCY. n. f. The ſame with ABHORRENCE.

The firſt tendency to any injuſtice that appears, muſt be ſuppreſſed with a ſhow of wonder and abhorrency in the parents and governours. Locke on Education, § 120.

ABHO'RRENT. adj. [from abhor.]

1. Struck with abhorrence.

——— For if the worlds
In worlds incloſ'd would on his ſenſes burſt,
He would abhorrent turn. Thomſon's Summer, l. 310.

2. Contrary to, foreign, inconſiſtent with. It is uſed with the particles from or to, but more properly with from.

This I conceive to be an hypotheſis, well worthy a rational belief, and yet is it ſo abhorrent from the vulgar, that they would as ſoon believe Anaxagoras, that ſnow is black, as him that ſhould affirm it is not white; and if any ſhould in effect aſſert, that the fire is not formally hot, it would be thought that the heat of his brain had fitted him for Anticyra, and that his head were ſo to madneſs. Glanville's Sceptis Scient. c. 12.

Why then theſe foreign thoughts of ſtate employments,
Abhorrent to your function and your breeding?
Poor droning truants of unpractis'd eaſe,
Bred in the fellowſhip of beardleſs boys,
What wonder is it if you know not men?

Dryden's Don Sebaſtian.

ABHO'RRER. n. f. [from abhor.] The perſon that abhors, a hater, deteſter.

The repreſentatives of the lower clergy were rail'd at, for diſputing the power of the biſhops, by the known abhorrers of epiſcopacy, and abuſed for doing nothing in the convocations, by theſe very men who wanted to bind up their hands.

Swift. Examiner, N° 21.

ABHO'RRING. The object of abhorrence. This ſeems not to be the proper uſe of the participial noun.

And they ſhall go forth, and look upon the carcaſes of the men that have tranſgreſſed againſt me: for their worm ſhall not die, neither ſhall their fire be quenched, and they ſhall be an abhorring unto all fleſh. Iſaiah, lxvi. 24.

To ABIDE. v. n. I abode or abid. [from bidan, or abidan, Sax.]

1. To dwell in a place, not remove.

Thy ſervant became ſurety for the lad unto my father, ſaying, if I bring him not unto thee, then I ſhall bear the blame to my father for ever. Now therefore I pray thee, let thy ſervant abide inſtead of the lad, a bondman to my lord; and let the lad go up with his brethren. Gen. xliv. 32, 33.

2. To dwell.

The Marquis Dorſet, as I hear, is fled
To Richmond, in the parts where he abides

Shakeſp. Richard III.

3. To remain, not ceaſe or fail.

They that truſt in the Lord ſhall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever. Pſalm cxxv. 1.

4. To

4. To continue in the ſame ſtate.

The fear of the Lord tendeth to life; and he that hath it ſhall abide ſatisfied. Prov. xix. 2

Thoſe who apply themſelves to learning, are forced to acknowledge one God, incorruptible and unbegotten; who is the only true being, and abides for ever above the higheſt heavens, from whence he beholds all the things that are done in heaven and earth. Stillingfl. Defence of Diſc. on Rom. Idolat.

There can be no ſtudy without time, and the mind muſt abide and dwell upon things, or be always a ſtranger to the inſide of them. South.

5. To wait for, expect, attend, wait upon, await; uſed of things prepared for perſons, as well as of perſons expecting things.

Home is he brought, and laid in ſumptuous bed,
Where many ſkilful leeches him abide,
To ſave his hurts. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 5. ſtanz. 17

While lions war, and battle for their dens,
Poor harmleſs lambs abide their enmity Shakeſp. Hen. VI p. 3.

Bonds and afflictions abide me. Acts xx. 23

6. To bear or ſupport the conſequences of a thing.

Ah me! they little know
How dearly I abide that boaſt ſo vain.
Milton's Par. Loſt, b. iv l. 87.

7. To bear or ſupport, without being conquered or deſtroyed.

But the Lord he is the true God, he is the living God, and an everlaſting king: At his wrath the earth ſhall tremble, and the nations ſhall not be able to abide his indignation. Jer. x. 10.

It muſt be allowed a fair preſumption in favour of the truth of my doctrines, that they have abid a very rigorous teſt now for above thirty years, ſtand yet firm; and the longer and more ſtrictly they are look'd into, the more they are confirmed to this very day. Hickman, Letter 1.

8. To bear without averſion; in which ſenſe it is commonly uſed with a negative.

Thou can'ſt not abide Timotheus; this is but love of thyſelf. Sidney, b. ii.

Thy vile race,
Though thou didſt learn, had that in't, which good natures
Could not abide to be with; therefore waſt thou Deſervedly confin'd into this rock. Shakeſp. Tempeſt.

9. To bear or ſuffer.

That chief (rejoin'd the God) his race derives
From Ithaca, and wond'rous woes ſurvives,
Laertes' ſon girt with circumfluous tides
He ſtill calamitous conſtraint abides Pope's Odyſſ. b. iv. l. 750.

10. It is uſed with the particle with before a perſon, and at or in before a place.

It is better that I give her to thee, than that I ſhould give her to another man. Abide with me. Gen. xxix. 19.

For thy ſervant vowed a vow, while I abode at Geſhur in Syria, ſaying, if the Lord ſhall bring me again indeed to Jeruſalem, then I will ſerve the Lord 2 Sam. xv

11. It is uſed with by before a thing; as, to abide by his teſtimony; to abide by his own ſkill, that is, to rely upon them; to abide by an opinion, to maintain it; to abide by a man, is alſo, to defend or ſupport him. But theſe forms are ſomething low.

Of the participle abid, I have found only the example in Woodward.

ABI'DER. n. ſ. [from abide.] The perſon that abides or dwells in a place, perhaps that lives or endures. A word little in uſe.

ABI'DING. n. ſ. [from abide.] Continuance.

We are ſtrangers before thee and ſojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on the earth are as a ſhadow, and there is none abiding 1 Chron. xxix. 15.

The air in that region is ſo violently removed, and carried about with ſuch ſwiftneſs, as nothing in that place can conſiſt or have abiding. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

A'BJECT adj. [abjectus, Lat. thrown away as of no value.]

1. Mean, or worthleſs, ſpoken of perſons.

That rebellion
Came like itſelf in baſe and abject routs,
Led on by bloody youth guarded with rage,
And countenanc'd by boys and beggary. Shakeſp. Hen. IV.

Honeſt men, who tell their ſovereigns what they expect from them, and what obedience they ſhall be always ready to pay them, are not upon an equal foot with ſuch baſe and abject flatterers, and are therefore always in danger of being the laſt in the royal favour. Addiſon's Whig Examiner.

2. Contemptible, or of no value; uſed of things.

I was at firſt, as other beaſts that graze
The trodden herb, of abject thoughts and low
Milt. Paradiſe Loſt, b. ix. l. 571.

3. Without hope or regard; uſed of condition.

The rarer thy example ſtands,
By how much from the top of wond'rous glory,
Strongeſt of mortal men,
To loweſt pitch of abject fortune thou art fall'n.
Milton's Samſon Agoniſtes.

We ſee man and woman in the higheſt innocence and perfection, and in the moſt abject ſtate of guilt and infirmity
Addiſon. Spectator, N° 273.

4. Deſtitute, mean and deſpicable; uſed of actions.

To what baſe ends, and by what abject ways,
Are mortals urg'd thro' ſacred luſt of praiſe?
Pope's Eſſay on Criticiſm

They not from trifles, not from gods refrain
Dryden's Juvenal, Sat 8

A'BJECT n. ſ. A man without hope, a man whoſe miſeries

But in mine adverſity they rejoiced, and gathered themſelves together: yea, the abjects gathered themſelves together againſt me, and I knew it not, they did tear me, and ceaſed not. Pſalm xxxv 15.

To ABJE'CT. v. a. [abjicio, Lat.] To throw away. A word rarely uſed.

ABJE'CTEDNESS. n. ſ. [from abject.] The ſtate of an abject.

He would love at no leſs rate than death; and, from the ſupereminent height of glory, ſtooped and abaſed himſelf to the ſufferance of the extremeſt of indignities, and ſunk himſelf to the bottom of abjectedneſs, to exalt our condition to the contrary extreme. Boyle's Works.

ABJE'CTION. n. ſ. [from abject.] Meanneſs of mind; want of ſpirit; ſervility, baſeneſs.

Is this ſhould be termed baſeneſs, abjection of mind, or ſervitude is it creeable? Hooker, b. v. § 47.

Now the juſt medium of this caſe lies betwixt the pride and the abjection, the two extremes. L'Eſtrange.

A'BJECTLY. adv. [from abject.] In an abject manner, meanly, baſely, ſervilely, contemptibly

ABJECTNESS. n. ſ. [from abject.] The ſame with abjection; ſervility, meanneſs.

Servility and abjectneſs of humour is ſimplicitely involved in the charge of lying, the condeſcending to that, being a mark of a diſingenuous ſpirit. Government of the Tongue, § 8

By humility I mean not the abjectneſs of a baſe mind but a prudent care not to over-value ourſelves upon any account
Grew's Coſmologia Sacra, b. ii. c. 7.

ABI'LITY n. ſ. [Habileté, Fr.]

1. The power to do any thing, whether depending upon ſkill, or riches, or ſtrength, or any other quality

Of ſinging thou haſt got the reputation,
Good Thyrſis, mine I yield to thy ability;
My heart doth ſeek another eſtimation. Sidney, b. i.

If aught in my ability may ſerve
To lighten what thou ſuffer'ſt, and appeaſe
Thy mind with what amends is in my pow'r
Milton's Samſon Agoniſtes, l. 744.

They gave after their ability unto the treaſure of the work.
Ezra ii. 69.

If any man miniſter, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth: that God in all things may be glorified through Jeſus Chriſt. 1 Pet. iv. 11.

2. Capacity.

Children in whom there was no blemiſh, but well-favoured, and ſkilful in all wiſdom, and cunning in knowledge and underſtanding ſcience, and ſuch as had ability in the king's palace. Dan. i. 4.

3. When it has the plural number, abilities, it frequently ſignifies the faculties or powers of the mind, and ſometimes the force of underſtanding given by nature, as diſtinguiſhed from acquired

Wherever we find our abilities too weak for the performance, he aſſures us of the aſſiſtance of his holy ſpirit Rogers's Sermons.

Whether it may be thought neceſſary, that in certain tracts of country, like what we call pariſhes, there ſhould be one man, at leaſt, of abilities to read and write?
Swift's Arguments againſt aboliſhing Chriſtianity.

ABINTE'STATE. adj. [of ab, from, and inteſtatus, Lat.] A term of law, implying him that inherits from a man, who, though he had the power to make a will, yet did not make it.

To ABJU'RE. v. a. [abjuro, Lat.]

1. To caſt off upon oath, to ſwear not to do ſomething.

Either to die the death, or to abjure
For ever the ſociety of man. Shakeſp. Midſum. Night's Dream.

No man, therefore, that hath not abjured his reaſon, and ſworn allegiance to a preconceived fantaſtical hypotheſis, can undertake the defence of ſuch a ſuppoſition.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. To retract, or recant, or abnegate; a poſition upon oath.

ABJURA'TION n. ſ. [from abjure.] The act of abjuring. The oath taken for that end

Until Henry VIII. his time, if a man, having committed felony, could go into a church or church-yard, before he were apprehended, he might not be taken from thence to the uſual trial of law, but confeſſing his fault to the ſextries, or to the coroner, gave his oath to forſake the realm for ever, which was called abjuration.

There are ſome abjurations ſtill in force among us here in England, as, by the ſtatute of the 25th of king Charles II. all perſons that are admitted into any office, civil or military, must take the teſt, which is an abjuration of ſome doctrines of the church of Rome.

There is likewiſe another oath of abjuration, which laymen and clergymen are both obliged to take; and that is, to abjure the Pretender. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

To ABLA'CTATE. v. a. [ablacto, Lat.] To wean from the breaſt.

ABLACTA'TION. n. ſ. One of the methods of grafting; and, according to the ſignification of the word, as it were a weaning of a cyon by degrees from its mother ſtock, not cutting it off wholly from the ſtock, till it is firmly united to that on which it is grafted.

ABLAQUEA'TION. [ablaqueatio, Lat.] The act or practice of opening the ground about the roots of trees, to let the air and water operate upon them.

Trench the ground, and make it ready for the ſpring: Prepare alſo ſoil, and uſe it where you have occaſion. Dig borders. Uncover as yet roots of trees, where ablaqueation is requiſite. Evelyn's Kalendar

The tenure in chief ought to be kept alive and nouriſhed, the which, as it is the very root that doth maintain this ſilver ſtem, that by many rich and fruitful branches ſpreadeth itſelf into the chancery, exchequer, and court of wards. ſo if it be ſuffered to ſtarve, by want of ablaqueation, and other good huſbandry, not only this yearly fruit will much decreaſe from time to time, but alſo the whole body and boughs of that precious tree itſelf, will fall into danger of decay and dying.

Bacon's Office of Alienations.

ABLA'TION. n. ſ. [ablatio, Lat.] The act of taking away.

A'BLATIVE. n. s. [ablativus, Lat.]

1. That which takes away.

1. Having ſtrong faculties, or great ſtrength or knowledge, riches, or any other power of mind, body, or fortune.

He was not afraid of an able man, as Lewis the Eleventh was. But, contrariwiſe, he was ſerved by the ableſt men that were to be found; without which his affairs could not have proſpered as they did. Bacon's Henry VII.

Such other pamboo faculties he hath, that ſhew a weak mind and an able body, for the which the prince admits him: for the prince himſelf is ſuch another: the weight of an hair will turn the ſcales. Shakeſp. Henry IV. p. ...

2. Having power ſufficient, enabled.

All mankind acknowledge themſelves able and ſufficient to do many things, which actually they never do. South's Serm.

Every man ſhall give as he is able, according to the bleſſing of the Lord thy God, which he hath given thee. Deut. xvi. 17.

3. Before a verb, with the participle to, it ſignifies generally having the power; before a noun, with for, it means qualified.

Wrath is cruel, and anger is outrageous; but who is able to ſtand before envy? Prov. xxvii. 4.

There have been ſome inventions alſo, which have been able for the utterance of articulate ſounds, as the ſpeaking of certain words. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

To A'BLE. v. a. To make able; to enable, which is the word commonly uſed. See ENABLE

Plate fin with gold,
And the ſtrong lance of juſtice hurtleſs breaks:
Arm it with rags, a pigmy's ſtraw doth pierce it.
None does offend, none, I ſay none; I'll able 'em,
Take that of me, my friend, who have the pow'r
To ſeal th' accuſer's lips. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

Of long continuance in our temp'rate clime,
Foretel a liberal harveſt. Phillips.

3. To make abode, to dwell, to reſide, to inhabit.

Deep in a cave the Sibyl makes abode;
Thence full of fate returns, and of the God. Dryd. Æn. 6.

To ABO'DE. v. a. [See BODE.] To foretoken or foreſhow, to be a prognoſtic, to be ominous. It is taken, with its derivatives, in the ſenſe either of good or ill.

Every man,
After the hideous ſtorm that follow'd, was
A thing inſpir'd, and, not conſulting, broke
Into a general prophecy, that this tempeſt,
Daſhing the garment of this peace, aboded
The ſudden breach of it. Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

ABO'DEMENT. n. ſ. [from to abode.] A ſecret anticipation of ſomething future, an impreſſion upon the mind of ſome event to come; prognoſtication, omen.

I like not this.
For many men that ſtumble at the threſhold,
Are well foretold that danger lurks within.—
—Fuſh! man, abodements muſt not now affright us.

Shakeſpeare's Henry VI. p.

My lord biſhop, being ſomewhat troubled, took the freedom to aſk him, Whether he had never any ſecret abodement in his mind? No, replied the duke, but I think ſome adventure may kill me as well as another man. Wotton.

To ABO'LISH. v. a. [from aboleo, Lat. to blot out.]

1. To a[illegible]

For us to aboliſh what he hath eſtabliſhed, were preſumption moſt intolerable. Hooker, b. [illegible] § 15.

On the parliament's part it was propoſed, that all the biſhops, deans, and chapters, might be immediately taken away, and aboliſhed. Clarendon, b. viii.

2. To put an end to; to deſtroy

The long continued wars, between the Engliſh and the Scots, had then ſo ſeaſoned [illegible] hatreds and hate, which long continued peace hath ſince aboliſh[illegible]

A B O

That ſhall Perocles well requite, I wot,
And, with thy blood, abolish ſo reproachful blot
Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 4. ſtanza 45.
More deſtroy'd than thou
We ſhould be quite abolish'd, and expi
Milton's Par. Loſt, b. ii. l. 92.
Or wilt thou thyſelf
Abolish thy creation, and unmake
For him, what for thy glory thou haſt made? Idem, b. vii. l. 163.
Fermented ſpirits contract, harden, and conſolidate many fibres together, abolishing many canals; eſpecially where the fibres are the tendereſt, as in the brain. Arbuth. on Aliments
Nor could Vulcanian flame
The ſtench abolish, or the favour tame. Dryd. Virg. Geo. iii.

ABO'LISHABLE. adj. [from abolish.] That which may be abolished.

ABO'LISHER. n. ſ [from abolish.] He that aboliſhes.

ABO'LISHMENT. n. ſ. [from abolish.] The act of aboliſhing.

The plain and direct way againſt us herein, had been only to prove, that all ſuch ceremonies, as they require to be aboliſhed, are retained by us with the hurt of the church, or with leſs benefit than the aboliſhment of them would bring. Hooker, b. iv.

He ſhould therefore think the aboliſhment of that order among us, would prove a mighty ſcandal and corruption to our faith, and manifeſtly dangerous to our monarchy
Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of Englandman.

ABOLI'TION. n. ſ. [from aboliſh.] The act of aboliſhing. This is now more frequently uſed than aboliſhment

From the total abolition of the popular power, may be dated the ruin of Rome: for had the reducing hereof to its ancient condition, propoſed by Agrippa, been accepted inſtead of Mæcenas's model, that ſtate might have continued unto this day.

An apopexy is a ſudden abolition of all the ſenſes, external and internal, and of all voluntary motion, by the ſtoppage of the flux and reflux of the animal ſpirits through the nerves deſtined for thoſe motions. Arbuthnot on Diet

ABO'MINABLENESS. n. ſ [from abominable] The quality of being abominable; hatefulneſs, odiouſneſs.

Till we have proved, in its proper place, the eternal and eſſential difference between virtue and vice, we muſt forbear to urge atheiſts with the corruption and abominableneſs of their principles. Bentley's Sermons.

ABO'MINABLE adj [abominabilis, Lat.]

1. Hateful, deteſtable.

Return'd
Succeſsful beyond hope, to lead thee forth
Triumphant out of this infernal pit
Abominable, accurs'd, the houſe of woe. M. Par. Loſt, b. x.

It is not to be queſtioned, but the queen and miniſtry might eaſily redreſs this abominable grievance, by enlarging the number of juſtices of the peace, by endeavouring to chooſe men of virtuous principles. Swift's Project for the advancement of Religion.

2. Unclean

The ſoul that ſhall touch any unclean thing, as the uncleanneſs of man, or any unclean beaſt or any abominable unclean thing, and eat of the fleſh of the ſacrifice of peace-offerings, which pertain unto the Lord, even that ſoul ſhall be cut off from his people. Leviticus, vii. 21

3. In low and ludicrous language, it is a word of looſe and indeterminate cenſure.

They ſay you are a melancholy fellow.—I am ſo; I do love it better than laughing.—Thoſe that are in extremity of either, are abominable fellows, and betray themſelves to every modern cenſure, worſe than drunkards. Shakeſpeare's As you like it.

ABO'MINABLY. adv. [from abominable.] A word of low or familiar language, ſignifying exceſſively, extremely, exceedingly, in the ill ſenſe.

Since I have been your wife, I have obſerved great abuſes and diſorders in your family; your ſervants are mutinous and quarrelſome, and cheat you moſt abominably.
Arbuthnot's Hiſtory of John Bull.

To ABO'MINATE. v. a. [abominor, Lat.] To abhor, deteſt, hate utterly.

We are not guilty of your injuries,
No way conſent to them, but abhor,
Abominate, and loath this cruelty. Southern's Oroonoko.

He profeſſed both to abominate and deſpiſe all myſtery, refinement, and intrigue, either in a prince or miniſter. He could not tell what I meant by ſecrets of ſtate, where an enemy, or ſome rival nation, were not in the caſe. Swift's Gulliv. Travels.

ABOMINA'TION. n

1. Hatred, deteſtation; as, to have in abomination.

To aſſiſt king Charles by Engliſh or Dutch forces, would render him odious to his new ſubjects, who have nothing in ſo great abomination, as thoſe whom they hold for heretics.
Swift's Miſcellanies

2. The object of hatred.

That ye ſhall ſay, thy ſervant's trade hath been about cattle, from our youth even until now, both we and alſo our fathers: that ye may dwell in the land of Goſhen; for every ſhepherd is an abomination to the Egyptians. Geneſis, xlvi. 34.

3. Pollution, defilement.

And there ſhall in no wiſe enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatſoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie. Rev. xxi. 27.

Each heart in Rome does love and pity you,
Only th' adulterous Antony, moſt large
In his abominations, turns you off,
And gives his potent regiment to a trull,
That noiſes it againſt us. Shakeſp. Antony and Cleopatra.

4. The cauſe of pollution.

And the high places that were before Jeruſalem, which were on the right hand of the mount of corruption, which Solomon the king of Iſrael had builded for Aſhtoreth the abomination of the Zidonians, and for Chemoſh the abomination of the Moabites, and for Milcom the abomination of the children of Ammon, did the king defile. 2 Kings, xxiii. 13.

ABORIGINES. n. ſ. Lat. The earlieſt inhabitants of a country, thoſe of whom no original is to be traced, as, the Welſh in Britain.

To ABO'RT, v. n. [aborto, Lat.] To bring forth before the time; to miſcarry. Dict.

ABO'RTION. n. ſ. [abortio, Lat.]

1. The act of bringing forth untimely.

2. The produce of an untimely birth

His wife miſcarried; but as the abortion proved only a female foetus, he comforted himſelf, that, had it arrived to perfection, it would not have anſwered his account.
Arbuthnot and Pope's Martinus Scribleras.

Behold my arm thus blaſted, dry and wither'd,
Shrunk like a foul abortion, and decay'd,
Like ſome untimely product of the ſeaſons,
Robb'd of its properties of ſtrength and office.
Rowe's Jane Shore.

ABO'RTIVE. n. ſ. That which is born before the due time. See ABORTIVE, adj

No common wind, no cuſtomed event,
But they will pluck away its nat'ral cauſes,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and ſigns,
Abortives, and preſages, tongues of heav'n
Plainly denouncing vengeance upon John. Shakeſ. K. John.

Take the fine ſkin of an abortive, and, with ſtarch thin laid on, prepare your ground or tablet. Peacham on Drawing

This is certain, that many are, by this means, preſerved, and do ſignal ſervice to their country, who, without ſuch a proviſion, might have periſhed as abortives, or have come to an untimely end, and perhaps have brought, upon their guilty parents, the like deſtruction. Addiſon. Guardian, N° 166.

ABO'RTIVE. adj. [abortivus, Lat.]

1. That which is brought forth before the due time of birth.

If ever he have child, abortive be it,
Prodigious, and untimely brought to light. Shakeſp. Rich. III.

All th' unaccompliſh'd works of nature's hand,
Abortive, monſtrous, or unkindly mix'd,
Diſſolv'd on earth, fleet hither. Paradiſe Loſt, b ii. l. 456.

2. Figuratively, that which fails for want of time.

This is the true cauſe, why ſo many politic conceptions, ſo elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for delivery, do yet, in the iſſue, miſcarry and prove abortive.

Falſe hopes
Her cherriſhes, nor will ſhe fruit expect
Th' autumnal ſeaſon, but, in ſummer's pride
When other orchards ſmile, abortive fall. Philips.

How often haſt thou waited at my cup,
Fed from my trencher, kneel'd down at the board,
When I have feaſted with queen Margaret?
Remember it, and let it make thee creſt-fall'n;
Ay, and allay this thy abortive pride. Shakeſp. Hen. VI p. ii.

These paſs'd, if any paſs, the void profound
Of uneſſential night receives him next,
Wide-gaping! and with utter loſs of being
Threatens him, plung'd in that abortive gulf.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ii. l. 491.

ABO'RTIVELY. adv. [from abortive.] Born without the due time, immaturely, untimely.

ABO'RTIVENESS. n. ſ. [from abortive.] The ſtate of abortion.

ABO'RTMENT. n ſ. [from abort] The thing brought forth out of time; an untimely birth

I ſhall not then doubt the happy iſſue of my undertakings in this deſign, whereby concealed treaſures, which now ſeem utterly loſt to mankind, ſhall be confined to ſo univerſal a piety, and brought into uſe by the induſtry of converted penitents, whoſe wretched carcaſes the impartial laws have, or ſhall, dedicate, as untimely ſcaſts, to the worms of the earth, in whoſe womb thoſe deferred mineral riches muſt ever lie buried as loſt abortments, unleſs thoſe be made the active midwives to deliver them. Bacon's Phyſical Rem. 141

ABO'VE. prep. [from a, and bufan, Saxon; boven, Dutch.]

1. Higher in place.

So when with cracking flames a cauldron fries,
The bubbling waters from the bottom riſe;

Above the brims they force their fiery way,
Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day.
Dryden, Æneid vii. 1 643

3. More in quantity or number.

Every one that paſſeth among them, that are numbered from twenty years old and above, ſhall give an offering unto the Lord. Exodus, xxx. 14.

4. Higher in rank, power or excellence.

The Lord is high above all nations, and his glory above the heavens. Pſalm cxiii. 4

The public power of all ſocieties is above every ſoul contained in the ſame ſocieties. Hooker, b. i.

There is no riches above a ſound body, and no joy above the joy of the heart. Eccleſiaſticus, xxx. 16.

To her
Thou didſt reſign thy manhood, and the place
Wherein God ſet thee above her, made of thee,
And for thee: whoſe perfection far excell'd
Her's, in all real dignity Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. x. l. 1 [illegible]
And feeds with ſecret joy her ſilent breaſt. Dryden's Æneid.

4. Superiour to; unattainable by.

It is an old and true diſtinction, that things may be above our reaſon, without being contrary to it. Of this kind are the power, the nature, and the univerſal preſence of God, with innumerable other points. Swift.

5. Beyond, more than.

We were preſſed out of meaſure, above ſtrength; inſomuch that we deſpaired even of life. 2 Cor.

In this, of having thoughts unconfuſed, and being able, nicely to diſtinguiſh one thing from another, where there is but the leaſt difference, conſiſts, in a great meaſure, the exactneſs of judgment and clearneſs of reaſon, which is to be obſerved in one man above another. Locke.

The inhabitants of Tirol have many particular privileges above thoſe of the other hereditary countries of the emperour. Addiſon on Italy.

6. Too proud for, too high for. A phraſe chiefly uſed in familiar [illegible]

Kings and princes, in the earlier ages of the world, laboured in arts and occupations, and were above nothing that tended to promote the conveniences of life. Pope's Odyſſey, notes.

ABOVE, adv.

1. Over-head.

To men ſtanding below, men ſtanding aloft ſeem much leſſened, to thoſe above, men ſtanding below, ſeem not ſo much leſſened. Bacon.

When he eſtabliſhed the clouds above; when he ſtrengthened the fountains of the deep, when he gave to the ſea his decree, that the waters ſhould not paſs his commandment: when he appointed the foundations of the earth: then I was by him, as one brought up with him: and I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him. Proverbs, viii.

2. In the regions of heaven.

Your praiſe the birds ſhall chant in every grove,
And winds ſhall waft it to the pow'rs above. Pope's Paſtorals.

3. Before. [See ABOVE-CITED.]

I ſaid above, that theſe two machines of the balance, and the dreſſing, were only ornamental, and that the ſucceſs of the duel had been the ſame without them. Dryd. Dedicat. Æneid.

FROM ABOVE.

1. From an higher place.

The Trojans from above their foes beheld,
And with arm'd legions all the rampires fill'd. Dryd. Æneid.

2. From heaven.

Every good gift, and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the father of lights, with whom is no variableneſs, neither ſhadow of turning. James, i. 17.

ABOVE ALL. In the firſt place, chiefly.

I had alſo ſtudied Virgil's deſign, his diſpoſition of it, his manners, his grand conus management of the figures, the ſober retrenchments of his ſenſe, which always leaves ſomewhat to gratify our imagination, on which it may enlarge at pleaſure; but above all, the elegance of his expreſſion, and the harmony of his numbers. Dryden's Dedication to the Æneid.

ABOVE BOARD. In open ſight; without artifice or trick. A figurative expreſſion, borrowed from gameſters, who, when they put their hands under the table, are changing their cards. It is not only in familiar language.

It is the part alſo of an honeſt man to deal above-board, and without tricks. L'Eſtrange.

Though there have not been wanting ſuch heretofore, as have practiſed theſe unworthy arts (for as much as there have been villains at all places, and all ages) yet now-a-days they are content to play above board. South's Sermons.

ABOVE CITED. Cited before. A figurative expreſſion, taken from the ancient manner of writing books on ſcrolls, as whatever is cited or mentioned before in the ſame page, muſt be would I mean on this particular, did it not appear from another above-cited, that this was a fact [illegible]

Addiſon on [illegible]

ABOVE-GROUND. An expreſſion uſed to ſignify, that a man is alive, not in the grave.

A [illegible] ABOVE-CITED.

I do not remember, that Homer any-where falls into the faults a eye-witnoned, which were indeed the falſe refinements of latter ages. Addiſon, Spectator, N° 279.

To ABOUND. v. n. [abunde, Lat. abonder, French.]

1. To have in great plenty, uſed ſometimes with the particle in, and ſometimes the particle with.

The king-becoming graces,
I have no reliſh of them, but abound
In the diviſion of each ſeveral crime,
Acting it many ways. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

Corn, wine, and oil, are wanting to this ground,
In which our countries fruitfully abound. Dryd. Indian Emp.

A faithful man ſhall abound with bleſſings: but he that maketh haſte to be rich, ſhall not be innocent. Prov. xxvi. 20

Now that languages are made, and abound with words, ſtanding for ſuch combinations, an uſual way of getting theſe complex ideas, is, by the explication of thoſe terms that ſtand for them. Locke.

2. To be in great plenty.

And becauſe iniquity ſhall abound, the love of many ſhall wax cold. Matthew, xxiv. 12.

Words are like leaves, and where they moſt abound,
Much fruit of ſenſe beneath is rarely found.
Pope's Eſſay on Criticiſm.

ABOUT prep. [abutan, or abuton, Sax. which ſeems to ſignify encircling on the outſide.]

1. Round, ſurrounding, encircling.

Let not mercy and truth forſake thee: Bind them about thy neck; write them upon the table of thy heart. Proverbs, iii. 3

At this ſhe loudly ſhrieks,
'Tis he, 'tis he, ſhe cries, and tears her cheeks,
Her hair, her veſt, and, ſtooping to the ſands,
About his neck ſhe caſt her trembling hands. Dryd. Fables.

2. Near to.

Speak unto the congregation, ſaying, get you up from about the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Exodus.

Thou doſt nothing, Sergius,
Thou canſt endeavour nothing, nay, not think;
But I both ſee and hear it, and am with thee,
By and before, about and in thee too. Ben. Johnſ Catiline.

3. Concerning, with regard to, relating to.

When Conſtantine had finiſhed an houſe for the ſervice of God at Jeruſalem, the dedication he judged a matter not unworthy; about the ſolemn performance whereof, the greateſt part of the biſhops in chriſtendom ſhould meet together. Hooker, b. v § 12.

The painter is not to take ſo much pains about the drapery as about the face, where the principal reſemblance lies. Dryd. Pref. to Dufreſnoy.

They are moſt frequently uſed as words equivalent, and do both of them indifferently ſignify either a ſpeculative knowledge of things, or a practical ſkill about them, according to the exigency of the matter or thing ſpoken of. Tillot. Sermon 1.

Theft is always a ſin, although the particular ſpecies of it, and the denomination of particular acts, doth ſuppoſe poſitive laws about dominion and property. Stillingfleet's Defence of Diſcourſes on Romiſh Idolatry.

They ſhould always be heard, and fairly and kindly anſwered, when they aſk after any thing they would know, and deſire to be informed about. Curioſity ſhould be as carefully cheriſhed in children, as other appetites ſuppreſſed. Locke on Education, § 108.

It hath been practiſed as a method of making men's court, when they are aſked about the rate of lands, the abilities of tenants, the ſtate of trade and manufacture, to anſwer, that, in their neighbourhood, all things are in a flouriſhing condition. Swift's ſhort View of Ireland.

4. Engaged in, employed upon.

Our bleſſed Lord was pleaſed to command the repreſentation of his death and ſacrifice on the croſs, ſhould be made by breaking of bread and effuſion of wine, to ſignify to us the nature and ſacredneſs of the liturgy we are about. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

Labour, for labour's ſake, is againſt nature. The underſtanding, as well as all the other faculties, chooſes always the ſhorteſt way to its end, would preſently obtain the knowledge it is about, and then ſet upon ſome new enquiry. But this, whether lazineſs or haſte, often miſleads it. Locke.

They ought, however, to be provided with ſecretaries, and aſſiſted by our foreign miniſters, to tell their ſtory for them in plain Engliſh, and to let us know, in our mother-tongue, what it is our brave countrymen are about. Addiſon. Spect. N° 309.

5. Appendant to the perſon, as, cloaths, &c.

If you have this about you,
As I will give you when we go, you may
Boldly appear at the necromancer's hall. Miller's Canus.

It is not ſtrange to me, that perſons of the fairer ſex ſhould like, in all things about them, that handſomeneſs for which they find themſelves moſt liked. Boyle on Colours.

6. Reaſon-

6. Relating to the perſon, as a ſervant.

Liking very well the young gentleman, ſuch I took him to be, admitted this Delphantus about me, who well ſhewed, there is no ſervice like his that ſerves becauſe he loves. Sidney, b. i.

Good matter, corporal, captain, for my old dame's ſake, ſtand my friend ſhe hath no body to do any thing about her when I am gone, and ſhe is old and cannot help herſelf

Shakeſpeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

ABOUT. adv.

1. Circularly.

The weyward ſiſters, hand in hand,
Poſters of the ſea and land,
Thus do go about, about,
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice again to make up nine Shakeſp. Macbeth.

2. In circuit.

My honeſt lads, I'll tell you what I am about — Two yards and more.— No quips now, Piſtol indeed I am in the waiſt two yards about, but I am about no waſte, I am about thrift.

Shakeſpeare's Merry Wives of Windſor

A tun about was ev'ry pillar there,
A poliſh'd mirrour ſhone not half ſo clear Dryd. Fables.

3. Nearly.

When the boats were come within about ſixty yards of the pillar, they found themſelves all bound, and could go no farther, yet ſo as they might move to go about, but might not approach nearer. Bacon's New Atalantis.

4. Here and there, every way.

Up roſe the gentle virgin from her place,
And looked all about, if ſhe might ſpy
Her lovely knight to move his manly pace.

Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. ii. ſtanz. 33.

A wolf that was paſt labour, had the wit in his old age, yet to make the beſt of a bad game, he borrows a habit, and ſo about he goes, begging charity from door to door, under the diſguiſe of a pilgrim. L'Eſtrange.

5. With to before a verb; as, about to fly; upon the point, within a ſmall diſtance of.

Theſe dying lovers, and their floating ſons,
Suſpend the fight, and ſilence all our groans:
Beauty and youth, about to periſh, find
Such noble pity in brave Engliſh minds. Waller.

6. The longeſt way, in oppoſition to the ſhort ſtraight way.

God hath theſe natures, greatneſs of weight, cloſeneſs of parts; fixation; pliantneſs, or ſoftneſs, ammunity from ruſt, colour, or tincture of yellow. Therefore the ſure way (though moſt about) to make gold, is to know the cauſes of the ſeveral natures before rehearſed. Bacon's Natural Hiſt. N° 328.

Spies of the Volſcians
Held me in chaſe, that I was forc'd to wheel
Three or four miles about, elſe had I, Sir,
Half an hour ſince brought my report. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

7. To bring about, to bring to the point or ſtate deſired; as, he has brought about his purpoſes.

Whether this will be brought about, by breaking his head, I very much queſtion. Spectator.

To ABRIDGE. v. a. [abreger, Fr. abbrevio, Lat.]

1. To make ſhorter in words, keeping ſtill the ſame ſubſtance.

All theſe ſayings, being declared by Jaſon of Cyrene in five books, we will eſſay to abridge in one volume. 2 Macc. ii. 23.

2. To contract, to diminiſh, to cut ſhort.

The determination of the will, upon enquiry, is following the direction of that guide, and he, that has a power to act or not to act, according as ſuch determination directs, is free. Such determination abridges not that power wherein liberty conſiſts. Locke.

3. To deprive of; in which ſenſe it is followed by the particle from, or of, preceding the thing taken away.

I have diſcloſed mine eſtate,
By ſhewing ſomething a more ſwelling port,
Than my faint means would grant continuance;
Nor do I now make moan to be abridg'd
From ſuch a noble rate. Shakeſpeare's Merchant of Venice.

They were formerly, by the common law, diſcharged from pontage and murage; but this privilege has been abridged them ſince by ſeveral ſtatutes. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

Surely this commandment containeth the law and the prophets; and, in this one word, is the abridgment of all volumes of ſcripture. Hooker, b. ii. § 5.

Myſelf have play'd
The int'rim, by remembring you 'tis paſt,
Then brook abridgment, and your eyes advance
After your thoughts, ſtraight back again to France! Shakeſpeare's Henry V.

Idolatry is certainly the firſt-born of ſelf, the great and leading paradox; nay, the very abridgment and ſum total of all abſurdities. South's Sermons.

2. Abſtraction in general.

All trying, by a love of ſitteneſs,
To make abridgments, and to draw to leſs,
Even that nothing, which at firſt we were. Donne.

3. Reſtraint, or abridgment of liberty.

The conſtant deſire of happineſs, and the conſtraint it puts upon us, no body, I think, accounts an abridgment of liberty, or at leaſt an abridgment of liberty, to be complained of.

Locke.

ABROACH. adv. [See To BROACH.]

1. In a poſture to run out, to yield the liquor contained, properly ſpoken of veſſels.

The Templer ſpruce, while ev'ry ſpout's abroach,
Stays 'till 'tis fair, yet ſeems to call a coach. Swift's Miſcel.

The juice of gen'rous wine, (Aceſtes' gift,
When his Trinacrian ſhores the navy left)
He ſet abroach, and for the feaſt prepar'd,
In equal portions with the veniſon ſhar'd

Dryden's Virgil's Æneid, vol. i.

2. In a figurative ſenſe, in a ſtate to be diffuſed or advanced, in a ſtate of ſuch beginning as promiſes a progreſs.

That man, that ſits within a monarch's heart,
And ripens in the ſunſhine of his favour,
Would he abuſe the count'nance of the king,
[illegible]
In ſhadow of ſuch greatneſs? Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

ABROAD. adv. [compounded of a and broad. See BROAD.]

1. Without confinement; widely; at large.

Interr'd no watch
Againſt a wakeful foe, while I abroad,
Thro' all the coaſts of dark deſtruction ſeek
Deliverance. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ii. l. 463.

Again, the lonely fox roams far abroad,
On ſecret rapine bent, and midnight fraud,
Now haunts the cliff, now traverſes the lawn,
And flies the hated neighbourhood of man. Prior.

2. Out of the houſe.

Welcome, Sir,
This cell's my court, here have I few attendants,
And ſubjects none abroad. Shakeſpeare's Tempeſt.

Lady —— walked a whole hour abroad, without dying after it; at leaſt in the time I ſtaid, though ſhe ſeemed to be dying, and had convulſive motions ſeveral times in her head.

Pope's Letters.

3. In another country.

They thought it better to be ſomewhat hardly yoked at home, than for ever abroad, and diſcredited. Hooker, Pref.

Whoſoever offers at verbal tranſlation, ſhall have the misfortune of that young traveller, who loſt his own language abroad, and brought home no other inſtead of it. Sir J. Denham.

What learn our youth abroad, but to refine
The homely vices of their native land? Dryd. Span. Friar

He who sojourns in a foreign country, refers what he sees and hears abroad, to the state of things at home. Atterb. Serm.

4. In all directions, this way and that.

Full in the midst of this infernal road,
An elm displays her dusky arms abroad. Dryd. Virg. Æn. v.

5 Without, not within.

Bodies politic, being subject, as much as natural, to dissolution, by divers means, there are undoubtedly more states overthrown through diseases bred within themselves, than through violence from abroad. Hooker, Dedication.

To ABROGATE. v. a. [abrogo, Lat.] To take away from a law its force, to repeal, to annul.

Such laws, as have been made upon special occasions, which occasions ceasing, laws of that kind do abrogate themselves.
Hooker, b. iv. § 14.

The negative precepts of men may cease by many instruments, by contrary customs, by public disrepute, by long omission: but the negative precepts of God never can cease, but when they are expressly abrogated by the same authority.
Taylor's Rule of living holy.

ABROGA'TION n. s. [abrogatio, Lat.] The act of abrogating, the repeal of a law.

The commissioners from the confederate Roman catholics, demanded the abrogation and repeal of all those laws, which were in force against the exercise of the Roman religion.
Clarendon, b. vi.

To ABROO'K. v. a. [from To brook, with a superabundant, a word not in use.] To brook, to bear, to endure.

Sweet Nell, ill can thy noble mind abrook
The abject people gazing on thy face
With envious looks, still laughing at thy shame.
Shakespeare's Henry VI. p.

ABRU'PT. adj. [abruptus, Lat.] Broken off.

1. Broken, craggy.

Relentless, roaring, dreadful, down it comes
From the rude mountain, and the mossy wild,
Tumbling through rocks abrupt. Thomson's Winter.

2. Divided, without any thing intervening.

Or spread his airy flight,
Upborn with indefatigable wings,
Over the vast abrupt, ere he arrive
The happy isle. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 409.

3. Sudden, without the customary or proper preparatives.

My lady craves
To know the cause of your abrupt departure.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The abrupt and unkind breaking off the two first parliaments, was wholly imputed to the duke of Buckingham. Clarendon.

Abrupt, with eagle-speed she cut the sky,
Instant invisible to mortal eye.
Then first he recognized th' ethereal guest. Pope's Odyss. b. i.

4. Unconnected.

The abrupt style, which hath many breaches, and doth not seem to end but fail. Ben. Johnson's Discovery.

ABRU'PTED. adj. [abruptus, Lat. a word little in use.] Broken off suddenly.

The effects of whose activity are not precipitously abrupted, but gradually proceed to their cessations.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 10.

ABRU'PTION n. s. [abruptio, Lat.] Breaking off, violent and sudden separation.

Those which are inclosed in stone, marble, or such other solid matter, being difficultly separable from it, because of its adhesion to all sides of them, have commonly some of that matter still adhering to them, or at least marks of its abruption from them, on all other sides. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. 4.

ABRU'PTLY. adv. [See ABRUPT.] Hastily, without the due forms of preparation.

The sweetness of virtue's disposition, jealous even over itself, suffered her not to enter abruptly into questions of Marcus.
Sidney, b. ii.

Now missing from their joy so lately found,
So lately found, and so abruptly gone. Par. Regain. b.

They both of them punctually observed the time thus agreed upon, and that in whatever company or business they were engaged, they left it abruptly, as soon as the clock warned them to retire. Addison. Spectator, N° 241.

ABRU'PTNESS. n. s. [from abrupt.]

1. An abrupt manner, haste, suddenness, untimely vehemence.

2. The state of an abrupt thing; unconnectedness, roughness, craggedness.

The crystallized bodies found in the perpendicular intervals, are easily known from those that are lodged in the strata. The former have always their root, as the jewellers call it, which is only the abruptness, at the end of the body whereby it adhered to the stone, or sides of the intervals; which abruptness is caused by its being broke off from the said stone.
Woodward's Natural History, p. 4.

ABSCESS [abscessus, Lat.] A morbid cavity in the body, a tumour filled with matter, a term of chirurgery.

If the patient is not relieved, nor dies in eight days, the inflammation ends in a suppuration and an abscess in the lungs, and sometimes in some other part of the body. Arbuth. of D

Lindanus conjectured it might be some hidden abscess in the mesentery, which, breaking some few days after, was discovered to be an apostem of the mesentery. Harvey on Consumptions.

To ABSCI'ND. v. a. To cut off, either in a natural or figurative sense.

ABSCI'SSA [Lat.] Part of the diameter of a conic section, intercepted between the vertex and a semi-ordinate.

ABSCI'SSION. n. s. [abscissio, Lat.]

1. [illegible]

Fabricius ab Aquapendente renders the abscission of them difficult enough, and not without danger. Wiseman's Surgery.

2. The state of being cut off.

By cessation of oracles, with Montacutius, we may understand this intercision, not abscission, or consummate desolation.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. VI. c. 12.

To ABSCOND. v. n. [abscondo, Lat.] To hide one's self, to retire from the public view: generally used of persons in debt, or criminals eluding the law.

ABSCO'NDER n. s. [from abscond.] The person that absconds.

ABSENCE. n. s. [See ABSENT.]

1. The state of being absent, opposed to presence.

Sir, 'tis fit
You have strong party to defend yourself
By numbers, or by absence: all's in danger. Shakesp. Coriol.

His friends beheld, and pity'd him in vain,
For what advice can ease a lover's pain?
Absence, the best expedient they could find,
Might save the fortune, if not cure the mind. Dryd. Fab.

2. Want of appearance, in the legal sense.

Absence is of a fourfold kind or species. The first is a necessary absence, as in banished persons; this is entirely necessary. A second, necessary and voluntary; as, upon the account of the commonwealth, or in the service of the church. The third kind the civilians call a probable absence; as, that of students on the score of study. And the fourth, an absence entirely voluntary, as, on the account of trade, merchandise, and the like. Some add a fifth kind of absence, which is committed cum dolo & culpâ, by a man's non-appearance on a citation; as, in a contumacious person, who, in hatred to his contumacy, is, by the law, in some respects, reputed as a person present. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

You have given no dissertation upon the absence of lovers, nor laid down any methods how they should support themselves under those separations. Addison. Spectator, N° 241.

3. Inattention, heedlessness, neglect of the present object.

I continued my walk, reflecting on the little absences and distractions of mankind. Addison. Spectator, N° 77.

4. It is used with the particle from.

His absence from his mother oft he'll mourn,
And, with his eyes, look wishes to return. Dryd. Juv. Sat. i.

ABSENT. adj. [absens, Lat.]

1. Not present; used with the particle from.

In spring the fields, in autumn hills I love;
At morn the plains, at noon the shady grove,
But Delia always, absent from her sight,
Nor plains at morn, nor groves at noon delight. Pope's Past.

Where there is advantage to be given,
Both more and less have given him the revolt;
And none serve with him but constrained things,
Whose hearts are absent too. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Whether they were absent or present, they were vexed alike. Wisd. xi. 11.

2. Absent in mind, inattentive; regardless of the present object.

I distinguish a man that is absent, because he thinks of something else, from him that is absent, because he thinks of nothing. Addison. Spectator, N° 77.

To ABSE'NT. v. a. To withdraw, to forbear to come into presence.

If thou didst ever hold me in thy heart,
Absent thee from felicity awhile,
And in this harsh world draw thy breath in pain,
To tell my tale. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

But if thou think'st trial unsought may find
Us both securer, than thus warn'd thou seem'st,
Go—for thy stay, not free, absents thee more.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 3 2.

Tho' I am forc'd, thus to absent myself
From all I love, I shall contrive some means,
Some friendly intervals, to visit thee.
Southern's Spartan Dame.

The Arengo, however, is still called together in cases of extraordinary importance; and if, after due forewarning, any member absents himself, he is to be fined to the value of about a penny English. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

ABSENTA'NEOUS. adj. Relating to absence, absent. Dict.

ABSENTE'E. n. s. He that is absent from his station or employment, or country. A word used commonly with regard to gentlemen living out of their country.

Then was the first statute made against absentees, commanding all such as had land in Ireland, to return and reside thereupon. Sir John Davnet on Ireland.

A great part of estates in Ireland are owned by absentees, and such as draw over the profits raised out of Ireland, refunding nothing. Child's Discourse on Trade.

To ABSIST. v. n. [absisto, Lat.] To stand off, to leave off. Dict.

To ABSOLVE. v. a. [absolvo, Lat.]

1. To clear, to acquit of a crime in a judicial sense.

Your great goodness, out of holy pity,
Absolv'd him with an axe. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Our victors, blest in peace, forget their wars,
Enjoy past dangers, and absolve the stars. Tickell.

As he hopes, and gives out, by the influence of his wealth to be here absolved, in condemning this man, you have an opportunity of belying that general scandal, of redeeming the credit lost by former judgments. Swift's Miscellanies.

2. To set free from an engagement or promise.

Compel'd by threats to take that bloody oath,
And the act ill, I am absolv'd by both. Waller's Maid's Tragedy.

This command, which must necessarily comprehend the persons of our natural fathers, must mean a duty we owe them, distinct from our obedience to the magistrate, and from which the most absolute power of princes cannot absolve us. Locke.

3. To pronounce a sin remitted, in the ecclesiastical sense.

But all is calm in this eternal sleep,
Here grief forgets to groan, and love to weep;
Even superstition loses every fear,
For God, not man, absolves our frailties here.
Pope's Eloisa to Abelard.

4. To finish, to complete.

If that which is so supposed infinitely distant from what is now current, is distant from us by a finite interval, and not infinitely, then that one circulation which preceded it, and must necessarily be like ours, and consequently absolved in the space of twenty-four hours. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

What cause
Mov'd the creator, in his holy rest
Through all eternity, so late to build
In chaos; and the work begun, how soon
Absolv'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v. l. 94.

ABSOLUTE. adj. [absolutus, Lat.]

1. Complete; applied as well to persons as things.

Because the things that proceed from him are perfect, without any manner of defect or maim; it cannot be, but that the words of his mouth are absolute, and lack nothing which they should have, for performance of that thing whereunto they tend. Hooker, b. a. § 6.

2. Unconditional; as, an absolute promise.

Although it runs in forms absolute, yet it is indeed conditional, as depending upon the qualification of the person to whom it is pronounced. South's Sermons.

3. Not relative, as, absolute space.

I see still the distinctions of sovereign and inferior, of absolute and relative worship, will bear any man out in the worship of any creature with respect to God, as well at least as it doth in the worship of images. Stillingfl. Def of Disc. on Rom. Idol.

An absolute mode is that which belongs to its subject, without respect to any other beings whatsoever: but a relative mode is derived from the regard that one being has to others.

In this sense we speak of the ablative case absolute in grammar.

4. Not limited; as, absolute power.

My crown is absolute, and holds of none,
I cannot in a base subjection live,
Nor suffer you to take, though I would give. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

5. Positive, certain, without any hesitation. In this sense it rarely occurs.

Long is it since I saw him,
But time hath nothing blurr'd those lines of favour,
Which then he wore; the snatches in his voice,
And burst of speaking were as his. I'm absolute
'Twas very Cloten. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

What is his strength by land? —
— Great and increasing: but by sea
He is an absolute master. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

ABSOLUTELY. adv. [from absolute.]

1. Completely, without restriction.

All the contradictions which grow in those minds, that neither absolutely climb the rock of virtue, nor freely sink into the sea of vanity. Sidney.

What merit they can build upon having joined with a protestant army, under a king they acknowledged, to defend their own liberties and properties, is, to me, absolutely inconceivable, and, I believe, will equally be so for ever. Swift's Presb. Plea.

2. Without relation.

Absolutely we cannot discommend, we cannot absolutely approve either willingness to live, or forwardness to die. Hooker, b. v.

These then being the perpetual causes of zeal, the greatest [illegible] relatively to us, it is therefore good to be zealously affected for the one against the other. Sprat's Sermons.

No sensible quality, as light, and colour, and heat, and sound, can be subsistent in the bodies themselves, absolutely considered, without a relation to our eyes and ears, and other organs of sense. These qualities are only the effects of our sensation, which arise from the different motions, upon our nerves, [illegible] and positions. Bentley's Sermons.

3. Without limits or dependance.

The prince long time had courted fortune's love,
But, once possess'd, did absolutely reign.
Thus, with their Amazons, the heroes strove,
And conquer'd first those beauties they would gain.
Dryden's Annus Mirabilis.

4. Without condition.

And of that nature, for the most part, are things absolutely [illegible] either to be done or avoided. Hooker's Preface.

5. Peremptorily, positively.

Being as I am, why didst not thou
Command me absolutely not to go,
Going into such danger, as thou saidst? Parad. Lost, b. x.

A [illegible] [illegible]
1 [illegible]

2. Freedom from dependance, or limits.

The absoluteness and illimitedness of his commission was generally much spoken of. Clarendon, b. viii.

There is nothing that can raise a man to that generous absoluteness of condition, as neither to cringe, to fawn, or to depend meanly; but that which gives him that happiness within himself, for which men depend upon others. South's Serm.

3. Despoticism.

He kept a strait hand on his nobility, and chose rather to advance clergymen and lawyers, which were more obsequious to him, but had less interest in the people; which made for his absoluteness, but not for his safety. Bacon's Henry VII.

ABSOLUTION. n. s. [absolutio, Lat.]

1. Acquittal.

Absolution, in the civil law, imports a full acquittal of a person by some final sentence of law; also, a temporary discharge of his further attendance upon a mesne process, through a failure or defect in pleading, as it does likewise in the canon law, where, and among divines, it likewise signifies a relaxation of him from the obligation of some sentence pronounced either in a court of law, or else in foro pœnitentiali. Thus there is, in this kind of law, one kind of absolution, termed judicial, and another, stiled a declaratory or extrajudicial absolu-

2. The remission of sins, or penance, declared by ecclesiastical authority.

The absolution pronounced by a priest, whether papist or protestant, is not a certain infallible ground to give the person, so absolved, confidence towards God. South's Sermons.

ABSOLUTORY. adj. [absolutorius, Lat.] That which absolves.

Though an absolutory sentence should be pronounced in favour of the persons, upon the account of nearness of blood; yet, if adultery shall afterwards be truly proved, he may be again proceeded against as an adulterer. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ABSONANT. adj. [See ABSONOUS.] Contrary to reason, wide from the purpose.

ABSONOUS. adj. [absonus, Lat. ill-sounding.] Absurd, contrary to reason.

To suppose an uniter of a middle constitution, that should partake of some of the qualities of both, is unwarranted by any of our faculties, yea, most absonous to our reason.
Glanville's Scepsis Scientifica, c. 4.

To ABSORB. v. a. [absorbeo, Lat. preter, absorbed; part. pret. [illegible]

1. To swallow up.

Some tokens shew
Of fearless friendship, and their sinking mates
Sustain, vain love, tho' laudable, absorpt
By a fierce eddy, they together found
The vast profundity. Philips.

Moses imputed the deluge to the disruption of the abyss, and St Peter, to the particular constitution of that earth, which made it obnoxious to be absorpt in water. Burn. Theory.

2. To suck up. See ABSORBENT.

Supposing the forementioned consumption should prove so durable, as to absorb and exterminate the said sanguine parts to an extreme degree, it is evident, that the fundamental parts must necessarily come into danger. Harvey on Consumptions.

ABSORBENT. n. s. [absorbens, Lat.]

A medicine that, by the softness or porosity of its parts, either causes the asperities of pungent humours, or dries away superfluous moisture in the body. Quincy.

There is a third class of substances, commonly called absorbents; as, the various kinds of testa, coral, chalk, crabs eyes, &c. which have quite an effervescence, and are therefore called called alkalis, though not so properly, for they are not salts.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ABSORPT. part [from absorb.] Swallowed up, used as well, in a figurative sense, of persons, as, in the primitive, of things.

What can you expect from a man, who has not talked these five days? who is withdrawing his thoughts, as far as he can, [illegible] fully possessed and absorpt in the past. Pope's Letters.

ABSORPTION. n. f. [from absorb.] The act of swallowing up.

It was below the dignity of those sacred penmen, or the spirit of God that directed them, to shew us the causes of this disruption, or of this absorption, this is left to the enquiries of men. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

To ABSTAIN v. n. [abstineo, Lat.] To forbear, to deny one's self any gratification, with the particle from.

If thou judge it hard and di[illegible]
Converting, Looking, loving, to abstain
From love's due rites, nuptial embraces sweet;
And, with desires, to languish without hope.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 993.

To be perpetually longing, and impatiently desirous of any thing, so that a man cannot abstain from it, is to lose a man's liberty, and to become a servant of meat and drink, or smoke.
Taylor's Rule of living holy.

Even then the doubtful billows scarce abstain
From the tost'd vessel on the troubled main. Dryden's Virgil.

ABSTEMIOUS. adj. [abstemius, Lat.] Temperate, sober, abstinent, refraining from excess or pleasures. It is used of persons; as, an abstemious hermit; and of things, as, an abstemious diet. It is spoken likewise of things that cause temperance.

The instances of longevity are chiefly amongst the abstemious. Abstinence in extremity will prove a mortal disease; but the experiments of it are very rare. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

[illegible] streams the love of wine expel,
(Such is the virtue of the abstemious weed)
Whether the colder nymph that rules the flood,
Extinguishes, and balks the drunken god.
Or that Melampus (so have some assur'd)
When the mad Praetides with charms he cur'd,
And pow'rful herbs, both charms and simples cast
Into the sober spring, where first their virtues past. Dryd. Fab.

ABSTE'MIOUSLY. adv. [from abstemious.] Temperately, soberly, without indulgence.

ABSTE'MIOUSNESS. n. f. [See ABSTEMIOUS.] The quality of being abstemious.

ABSTE'NTION n. f. [from abstineo, Lat.] The act of holding off, or refraining; restraint. Dict.

To ABSTERGE. v. a. [abstergo, Lat.] To cleanse by wiping; to wipe.

ABSTERGENT. adj. Cleansing; having a cleansing quality.

To ABSTE'RSE. [See ABSTERGE.] To cleanse, to purify; a word very little in use, and less analogical than abstergo.

Nor will we affirm, that iron receiveth, in the stomach of the ostrich, no alteration, but we suspect this effect rather from corrosion than digestion, not any tendence to chalification by the natural heat, but rather some attrition from an acid and vitriolous humority in the stomach, which may abstersе and shave the scorious parts thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii.

ABSTERSION. n. f. [abstersio, Lat.] The act of cleansing. See [illegible] abstersion, which is plainly a scouring off, or incision of the more viscous humours, and making the humours more fluid, and cutting between them and the part, as is found in nitrous water, which scoureth linen cloth speedily from the foulness. Bacon's Natural History, N°. 42.

ABSTE'RSIVE. adj. [from abstergo.] That has the quality of abstersing or cleansing.

It is good, after purging, to use apozemes and broths, not so much opening as those used before purging, but abstersive and mundifying clysters also are good to conclude with, to draw away the reliques of the humours. Bacon's Nat. History.

A tablet stood of that abstersive tree,
Where Æthiops' swarthy bird did haste to nest. Sir J. Denh.

There, many a flow'r abstersive grew,
Thy favrite flow'rs of yellow hue. Swift's Miscellanies

ABSTINENCE. n. f. [abstinentia, Lat.

1. Forbearance of any thing; with the particle from.

Because the abstinence from a present pleasure, that offers itself, is a pain, nay, oftentimes a ve[illegible] der that that operates after the [illegible] manner pain does, and lessens, in our thoughts, what is future; and so forces us, as it were, backward to its embraces. Locke.

2. Fasting, or forbearance of necessary food. It is generally distinguished from temperance, as the greater degree from the less; sometimes as single performances from habits; as, a day of abstinence, and a life of temperance.

Say, can you fast? your stomachs are too young?
And abstinence engenders maladies. Shakesp. Love's L. . Lost

Religious men, who hither must be sent
As awful guides of heavenly government;
To teach you penance, fasts, and abstinence,
To punish bodies for the souls offence. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

And the faces of them, which have used abstinence, shall shine above the stars, whereas our faces shall be blacker than darkness. 2 Esdras, vii.

ABSTINENCY. n. f. The same with ABSTINENCE

Were our rewards for the abstinencies, or riots, of this present life, under the prejudices of short or finite, the promises and threats of Christ would lose much of their virtue and energy. Hammond's Fundam.

ABSTINENT. adj. [abstinens, Lat.] That uses abstinence, in opposition to covetous, rapacious, or luxurious. It is used chiefly of persons.

ABSTO'RTED. adj. [abstortus, Lat.] Forced away, wrung from another by violence. Dict.

To ABSTRA'CT. v. a. [abstraho, Lat.]

1. To take one thing from another

Could we abstract from these pernicious effects, and suppose this were innocent, it would be too slight to be matter of praise. Decay of Piety.

2. To separate ideas.

Those, who cannot distinguish, compare and abstract, would hardly be able to understand and make use of language, or judge or reason to any tolerable degree. Locke.

3. To reduce to an epitome.

If we would fix in the memory the discourses we hear, or what we design to speak, let us abstract them into brief compends, and review them often. Watts's Improv. of the Mi

ABSTRACT adj. [abstractus, Lat. See the verb To ABSTRACT.]

1. Separated from something else, generally used with relation to mental perceptions; as, abstract mathematics, abstract terms, in opposition to concrete.

Mathematics, in its latitude, is usually divided into pure and mixed. And though the pure do handle only abstract quantity in general, as geometry, arithmetic, yet that which is mixed, doth consider the quantity of some particular determinate subject. So astronomy handles the quantity of heavenly motions, music of sounds, and mechanics of weights and powers. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

Abstract terms signify the mode or quality of a being, without any regard to the subject in which it is; as, whiteness, roundness, length, breadth, wisdom, mortality, life, death. Watts's Logick.

2. With the particle from.

Another fruit from the considering things in themselves, abstract from our opinions and other mens notions and discourses on them, will be, that each man will pursue his thoughts in that method, which will be most agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehension of what it suggests to him. Locke.

ABSTRACT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A smaller quantity, containing the virtue or power of a greater.

You shall there find a man, who is the abstract
Of all faults all men follow. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

If you are false, these epithets are small,
You're then the things, and abstract of them all. Dryd. Aur.

2. An epitome made by taking out the principal parts.

When Mnemon came to the end of a chapter, he recollected the sentiments he had remarked; so that he could give a tolerable analysis and abstract of every treatise he had read, just after he had finished it. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

3. The state of being abstracted.

The hearts of great princes, if they be considered, as it were in abstract, without the necessity of states, and circumstances of time, can take no full and proportional pleasure in the exercise of any narrow bounty Wotton.

ABSTRACTED. part. adj. [from abstract]

1. Separated.

That space the evil one abstracted stood
From his own evil, and for the time remain'd
Stupidly good. Milton.

2. Refined, abstruse.

Abstracted spiritual love, they like
Their souls, exhal'd. Donne.

3. Absent of mind, inattentive to present objects; as, an ab[illegible]

ABSTRA'CTEDLY. adv. With abstraction, simply, separately from all contingent circumstances.

Or whether more abstractedly we look,
Or on the writers, or the written book
Whence, but from heav'n, could men unskill'd in arts,
In several ages born, in several parts,
Weave such agreeing truths? or how, or why
Should all conspire to cheat us with a lie?
Unask'd their pains, ungrateful their advice,
Starving their gain, and martyrdom their price.
Dryden's Religio Laici.

ABSTRA'CTION n. f. [abstractio, Lat.]

1. The act of abstracting

ABSTRUSE. adj. [abſtruſus, Lat. thruſt out of ſight]

1. Hidden.

Th' eternal eye, whoſe ſight diſcerns
Abſtruſeſt thoughts, from forth his holy mount,
And from within the golden lamps that burn
Nightly before him, ſaw, without their light,
Rebellion riſing. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. v. l. 712.

2. Difficult, remote from conception or apprehenſion. It is oppoſed to obvious and eaſy.

So ſpake our Sire, and, by his count'nance, ſeem'd
Entering on ſtudious thoughts abſtruſe. Parad. Loſt, b. viii.

The motions and figures within the mouth are abſtruſe, and not eaſy to be diſtinguiſhed, eſpecially thoſe of the tongue, which is moved through the help of many muſcles, ſo eaſily, and habitually, and variouſly, that we are ſcarce able to give a judgment of motions and figures thereby framed Holder's Elements of Speech.

No man could give a rule of the greateſt beauties, and the knowledge of them was ſo abſtruſe, that there was no manner of ſpeaking which could expreſs them. Dryd. Dufreſnoy.

ABSTRU'SELY. adv. In an abſtruſe manner; obſcurely, not plainly, or obviouſly.

ABSTRU'SENESS. n. ſ [from abſtruſe] The quality of being abſtruſe; difficulty, obſcurity

It is not oftentimes ſo much what the ſcripture ſays, as what ſome men perſuade others it ſays, that makes it ſeem obſcure, and that as to ſome other paſſages that are ſo indeed, ſince it is the abſtruſeneſs of what is taught in them, that makes them almoſt inevitably ſo; it is little lefs fancy, upon ſuch a ſcore, to find fault with the ſtyle of the ſcripture, than to do ſo with the author for making us but men. Boyle on the Scripture.

ABSTRU'SITY. n. ſ [from abſtruſe]

1. Abſtruſeneſs.
2. That which is abſtruſe. A word ſeldom uſed.

Authors are alſo ſuſpicious, nor greatly to be ſwallowed, who pretend to write of ſecrets, to deliver antipathies, ſympathies, and the occult abſtruſities of things Brown's Vul. Err.

To ABSU'ME v. a. [abſumo, Lat.] To bring to an end by a gradual waſte; to eat up.

That which had been burning an infinite time could never be burnt, no not ſo much as any part of it; for if it had burned part after part, the whole muſt needs be abſumed in a portion of time. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ABSURD. adj. [abſurdus, Lat.]

1. Unreaſonable, without judgment, as uſed of men.

Seeming wiſe men may make ſhift to get opinion; but let no man chooſe them for employment, for certainly you had better take for buſineſs a man ſomewhat abſurd, than over formal. Bacon's Eſſay, 27.

2. Inconſiſtent, contrary to reaſon, uſed of ſentiments or practice.

The thing itſelf appeared deſireable to him, and accordingly he could not but like and deſire it; but then, it was after a very irrational abſurd way, and contrary to all the methods and principles of a rational agent; which never wills a thing really and properly, but it applies to the means, by which it is to be acquired. South's Sermons.

A man, who cannot write with wit on a proper ſubject, is dull and ſtupid; but one, who ſhews it in an improper place, is impertinent and abſurd. Addiſon. Spectator, N° 291.

But grant that thoſe can conquer, theſe can cheat,
'Tis plainly abſurd to call a villain great
Who wickedly is wiſe, or madly brave,
Is but the more a fool, the more a knave Pope's Eſſay on Man.

ABSU'RDITY. n. ſ. [from abſurd.]

1. The quality of being abſurd, want of judgment applied to men, want of propriety applied to things.

How clear ſoever this idea of the infinity of number be, there is nothing more evident than the abſurdity of the actual idea of an infinite number. Locke.

2. That which is abſurd, as, his travels were full of abſurdities. In which ſenſe it has a plural.

That ſatisfaction we receive from the opinion of ſome pre[illegible] in ourſelves, when we ſee the abſurdities of another, or when we re[illegible] on any paſt abſurdities of our own.
Addiſon. Spectator, N° 249.

ABSU'RDLY. adv. [from abſurd.] After an abſurd manner; [illegible]ſurdly, unreaſonably.

But man we find the only creature,
Who, led by folly, combats nature,
Who, when ſhe loudly cr[illegible]
With obſtinacy fixes there
And where his genius leaſt inclines,
Abſurdly bends his whole deſigns. Sw[illegible]
We may proceed yet further with the abſurdity of this opinion, that not only his principle is abſurd, but his conſequences alſo as abſurdly deduced from it. Bentley's Sermons.

ABSU'RDNESS. n. ſ. [from abſurd.] The quality of being abſurd, injudiciouſneſs, impropriety. See ABSURDITY; which is more frequently uſed

ABU'NDANCE n. ſ. [abondance, Fr.]

1. Plenty, a ſenſe chiefly poetical

At the whiſper of thy word,
Crown'd abundance ſpreads my board. C[illegible]
The doubled charge his ſubjects love ſupplies,
Who, in that bounty, to themſelves are kind,
So glad Egyptians ſee their Nilus riſe,
And, in his plenty, their abundance find. Dryd. Ann. Mir.

2. Great numbers.

The river Inn, during its courſe through the Tyrol, is generally ſhut up between a double range of mountains, that are moſt of them covered with woods of fir-trees. Abundance of peaſants are employed in hewing down of the largeſt of theſe trees, that, after they are barked and cut into ſhape, are tumbled down. Addiſon on Italy.

3. A great quantity

Their chief enterprize was the recovery of the Holy land; in which worthy, but extremely difficult, action, it is lamentable to remember what abundance of noble blood hath been ſhed with very ſmall benefit unto the Chriſtian ſtate.
Sir Walter Raleigh's Eſſays.

4. Exuberance, more than enough.

For well I wot, moſt mighty ſovereign,
That all this famous antique hiſtory,
Of ſome, th' abundance of an idle brain
Will judged be, and painted forgery. Spenſ. Fairy Q. b. ii.

AB[illegible]

1. Plentiful.

Good the more
Communicated, more abundant grows;
The author not impair'd, but honour'd more. Par. Loſt, b. v.

2. Exuberant.

If the veſſels are in a ſtate of too great rigidity, ſo as not to [illegible] hæmorrhages; eſpecially in the lungs, where the blood is abundant. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Fully ſtored It is followed ſometimes by in, commonly by with.

The world began but ſome ages before theſe were found out, and was abundant with all things at firſt, and men not very numerous, and therefore were not put to much to the uſe of their wits, to find out ways for living commodiouſly
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

4. It is applied generally to things, ſometimes to perſons.

The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-ſuffering and abundant in goodneſs and truth. Exod. xxxiv. 6.

ABU'NDANTLY. adv. [from abundant.]

1. In plenty.

Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life. Geneſis, i 20.

God on thee
Abundantly his gifts hath alſo pour'd;
Inward and outward both, his image fair. Par. Loſt, b. viii.

2. Amply, liberally, more than ſufficiently.

What the example of our equals wants of authority, is abundantly ſupplied in the imaginations of friendſhip, and the repeated influences of a conſtant converſation. Rogers's Serm.

Heroic poetry has ever been eſteemed the greateſt work of human nature. In that rank has Ariſtotle placed it; and Longinus is ſo full of the like expreſſions, that he abundantly confirms the other's teſtimony. Dryden's State of Innocence, Pref.

To ABU'SE v. a [abuſer, Lat.]

In abuſe the verb, ſ has the ſound of z; in the noun, the common ſound.

1. To make an ill uſe of.

They that uſe this world, as not abuſing it, for the faſhion of this world paſſeth away. 1 Cor vii. 31.

He has fixed and determined the time for our repentance, beyond which he will no longer await the perverſeneſs of men, no longer ſuffer his compaſſion to be abuſed. Rogers's Sermons.

2. To deceive, to impoſe upon.

The world hath been much abuſed by the opinion of making gold the work itſelf I judge to be poſſible; but the means hitherto propounded, are, in the practice, full of error
Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 126.

He perhaps,
Out of my weakneſs and my melancholy,
As he is very potent with ſuch ſpirits,
Abuſes me to damn me. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet

It imports the misrepresentation of the qualities of things and actions, to the common apprehensions of men, abusing their minds with false notions; and so, by this artifice, making evil pass for good, and good for evil, in all the great concerns of life. South's Sermons

Nor be with all these tempting words abus'd,
These tempting words were all to Sappho us'd.
Pope's Sappho to Phaon.

3. To treat with rudeness, to reproach.

I am no trumpet, but of life as honest
As you that thus abuse me. Shakespeare's Othello.

But he mocked them, and laughed at them, and abused them shamefully, and spake proudly. 2 Mac. v.

Some praise at morning what they blame at night,
But always think the last opinion right.
A muse by these is like a mistress used,
This hour she's idoliz'd, the next abus'd. Pope's Ess. on Crit.

The next criticism upon the stars seems to be introduced for no other reason, but to mention Mr. Bickerstaff, whom the author every-where endeavours to imitate and abuse. Addison.

ABUSE n. s. [from the verb abuse.]

1. The ill use of any thing.

The casting away things profitable for the sustenance of man's life, is an unthankful abuse of the fruits of God's good providence towards mankind. Hooker, b. v. § 9.

Little knows
Any, but God alone, to value right
The good before him, but perverts best things
To worst abuse, or to their meanest use. Parad. Lost, b. iv.

2. A corrupt practice, bad custom.

The nature of things is such, that, if abuses be not remedied, they will certainly increase. Swift for Advancem. of Relig.

3. Seducement.

Was it not enough for him to have deceived me, and through the deceit abused me, and, after the abuse, forsaken me, but that he must now, of all the company, and before all the company, lay want of beauty to my charge. Sidney, b. ii.

4. Unjust censure, rude reproach, contumely.

I dark in light, exposed
To daily fraud, contempt, abuse, and wrong. Samps. Agon.

ABUSER. n. s. [from the verb abuse.]

1. He that makes an ill use.
2. He that deceives.

Next thou, th' abuser of thy prince's ear. Denh. Sophy.

3. He that reproaches with rudeness.
4. A ravisher, a violater.

ABUSIVE. adj. [from abuse.]

1. Practising abuse.

The tongue mov'd gently first, and speech was low,
Till wrangling science taught it noise and show,
And wicked wit arose, thy most abusive foe. Pope's Mistell.

Dame Nature, as the learned show,
Provides each animal its foe,
Hounds hunt the hare, the wily fox
Devours your geese, the wolf your flocks.
Thus envy pleads a natural claim,
To persecute the muse's fame,
On poets in all times abusive,
From Homer down to Pope inclusive. Swift's Miscellanies.

2. Containing abuse, as, an abusive lampoon.

Next, Comedy appear'd with great applause,
Till her licentious and abusive
Waken'd the magistrates due Reformation.

3. Deceitful, a sense little used, yet not improper.

It is verified by a number of examples, that whatsoever is gained by an abusive treaty, ought to be restored in integrum.
Bacon's Considerations on War with Spain.

ABUSIVELY. adv. [from abuse.]

1. Improperly, by a wrong use.

The oil, abusively called spirit, of roses swims at the top of the water, in the form of a white butter, which I remember not to have observed in any other oil drawn in any limbeck.
Boyle's Sceptical Chymistry.

2. Reproachful.

ABUSIVENESS n. [from abuse.] The quality of being abusive, foulness of

Pick out of earth, like stones out of thy ground,
Profaneness, filthiness, abusiveness.
These are the scum, with which coarse wits abound.
The fire may spare these well, yet not go less. Herbert

To ABUT v. n. obsolete [aboutir, to touch at the end, Fr.]
To end at, to border upon, to meet, or approach to, with the particle upon.

Two mighty monarchies,
Whose high upreared and abutting fronts
Pert'ous the narrow ocean parts asunder. Shakesp. Henry V.

In entering the lane, we will first pitch at the Lones, two several corporations, alike affected by the addition of east and west, abutting upon a navigable creek, and joined by a fair bridge of many arches. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

ABUTTAL. n. s. [from abut.] The butting or boundaries of any land. A writing declaring on what lands, highways, or other places, it does abut. Diet.

ABUTMENT. n. s. [from abut.] That which abuts, or borders upon another.

ABYSM. n. s. [abysme, old Fr. now written contrarily abime.]
A gulf, the same with abyss.

My good stars, that were my former guides,
Have empty left their orbs, and shot their fires
Into the abysm of hell. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

ABYSS. n. s. [abyssus, Lat. Ἄβυσσος, bottomless, Gr.]

1. A depth without bottom.

Who shall tempt with wand'ring feet
The dark, unbottom'd, infinite abyss,
And, through the palpable obscure, find out
His uncouth way. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 405.

2. A great depth, a gulph.

The yawning earth disclos'd th' abyss of hell:
The weeping statues did the wars foretel,
And holy sweat from brazen idols fell. Dryd. Virg. Georg. i.

3. In a figurative sense, that in which any thing is lost.

For sepulchres themselves must crumbling fall
In time's abyss, the common grave of all. Dryd. Fun. Sat x.

If, discovering how far we have clear and distinct ideas, we confine our thoughts within the contemplation of those things, that are within the reach of our understandings, and launch not out into that abyss of darkness, out of a presumption, that nothing is beyond our comprehension. Locke.

4. The body of waters supposed at the center of the earth.

We are here to consider what is generally understood by the great abyss, in the common explication of the deluge; and 'tis commonly interpreted either to be the sea, or subterraneous waters hid in the bowels of the earth. Burnet's Theor. Earth.

5. In the language of divines, hell.

From that insatiable abyss,
Where flames devour, and serpents hiss,
Protect me to thy seat of bliss. [illegible]

AC, AK, or AKE.

Being initials in the names of places, as Acton, signify an oak, from the Saxon ac, an oak. Gibson's Camden.

ACACIA. n. s. [Lat.]

1. A drug brought from Egypt, which, being supposed the inspissated juice of a tree, is imitated by the juice of sloes, boiled to the same consistence. Dictionaire de Comm. Savary. Trevoux.

2. A tree commonly so called here, though different from that which produces the true acacia; and therefore termed pseudacacia, or Virginian acacia.

It hath a papilionaceous flower, from whose flower-cup rises the pointal, wrapped in a fimbriated membrane, which afterwards becomes a pod, opening into two parts, in which are contained several kidney-shaped seeds. Miller.

ACADEMIAL. adj. [from academy.] Relating to an academy, belonging to an academy.

ACADEMIAN. n. s. [from academy.] A scholar of an academy or university, a member of an university. Wood, in his Athenæ Oxonienses, mentions a great feast made for the academians.

ACADEMICK. n. s. [from academy.] A student of an university.

A young academic shall dwell upon a curtain that treats of trade in a dictatorial style, and shall be lavish in the praise of the author; while, at the same time, persons well skilled in those different subjects, hear the battle with contempt.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind, p. i. c. 5.

ACADEMICK. adj. [academicus, Lat.] Relating to an university.

While thro' poetic scenes the genius roves,
Or wanders wild in academic groves. Dunciad, b. iv. l. 481.

ACADEMICAL. adj. [academicus, Lat.] Belonging to an university.

He drew him first into the fatal circle, from a kind of refined privateness at his house at Lampsic in South Wales; where, after the academical life, he had taken such a taste of the rural, as I have heard him say, that he could well have bent his mind to a retired course. Wotton.

ACADEMICIAN. n. s. [academicien, Fr.] The member of an academy. It is generally used in speaking of the professors in the academies of France.

ACADEMIST. n. s. [from academy.] The member of an academy.

It is observed by the Parisian academists, that some amphibious quadrupeds, particularly the sea-calf or seal, have hut-pig ears extraordinarily large. Ray on the Creation.

ACADEMY. n. s. [anciently, and properly, with the accent on the first syllable, now frequently on the second. Academia, Lat. from Academus of Athens, whose house was turned into a school, from whom the Groves of Academe in Milton.]

1. An assembly or society of men, uniting for the promotion of some art.

Our court shall be a little academy,
Still and contemplative in living arts. Shak. Love's Lab. Lost.

2. The place where sciences are taught.

Amongst the academies, which were composed by the rare genius of those great men, these four are reckoned as the principal, namely, the Athenian school, that of Sicyon, that of Rhodes, and that of Corinth. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. An university.

4. A place of education, in contradistinction to the universities or public schools.

ACANTHUS. n. f. [Lat.] The name of the herb bears-foot, remarkable for being the model of the foliage on the Corinthian chapiter.

On either side
Acanthus, and each odʼrous bushy shrub,
Fenc'd up the verdant wall. Milt. Parad. Lost, b. iv. l. 696.

ACATALECTIC. n. f. [ἀκατάληκτος, Gr.] A verse which has the compleat number of sylables, without defect or superfluity.

To ACCEDE. v. n. [accedo, Lat.] To be added to, to come to, generally used in political accounts, as, another power has acceded to the treaty, that is, has become a party

To ACCELERATE. v. a. [accelero, Lat.]

1. To make quick, to hasten, to quicken motion; to give a continual impulse to motion, so as perpetually to encrease

Take new beer, and put in some quantity of stale beer into it; and see whether it will not accelerate the clarification by shaking the body of the beer, whereby the grosser parts may fall down into lees. Bacon's Natural History, N° 301.

If the rays endeavour to recede from the densest part of the vibration, they may be alternately accelerated and retarded by the vibrations overtaking them. Newton's Opticks.

Spices quicken the pulse, and accelerate the motion of the blood, and dissipate the fluids; from whence leanness, pains in the stomach, loathings, and fevers. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Lo! from the dread immensity of space
Returning, with accelerated rage
The ruthless comet to the sun descends. Thomf. Sum. l. 1690.

2. It is generally applied to matter, and used chiefly in philosophical language; but is sometimes used on other occasions.

In which council the king himself, whose continual vigilancy did suck in sometimes causeless suspicions, which few else knew, inclined to the accelerating a battle. Bacon's Henry VII.

Perhaps it may point out to a student now and then, what may employ the most useful labours of his thoughts, and accelerate his diligence in the most momentous enquiries. Watts's Impr.

ACCELERA'TION. n. f. [accelératus, Lat.]

1. The act of quickening motion.

The law of the acceleration of falling bodies, discovered first by Galileo, is, that the velocities acquired by falling, being as the time in which the body falls, the spaces through which it passes, will be as the squares of the velocities, and the velocity and time taken together, as in a quadruplicate ratio of the space.

2. The state of the body accelerated, or quickened in motion.

The degrees of acceleration of motion, the gravity of air, the existence or non-existence of empty spaces, either conservate or interspersed, and many the like, have taken up the thoughts and times of men in disputes concerning them. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To ACCEND. v. a. [accendo, Lat.] To kindle, to set on fire, a word very rarely used.

Our devotion, if sufficiently accended, would, as theirs, burn up innumerable books of this sort. Decay of Piety.

ACCE'NSION. n. f. [accensio, Lat.] The act of kindling, or the state of being kindled.

The fulminating damp will take fire at a candle, or other flame, and, upon its accension, gives a crack or report, like the discharge of a gun, and makes likewise an explosion so forcible as sometimes to kill the miners, break their limbs, shake the earth, and force coals, stones, and other bodies, even through they be of very great weight and bulk, from the bottom of the pit or mine. Woodward's Natural History, p. iv.

ACCENT. n. f. [Lat.]

1. The manner of speaking or pronouncing, with regard either to force or elegance.

I know, Sir, I am no flatterer; he that beguiled you in a plain accent was a plain knave, which, for my part, I will not be. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Your accent is something finer than you could purchase in so removed a dwelling. Shakespeare's As you like it.

2. In grammar, the marks made upon sylables to regulate their pronunciation.

Accent, as in the Greek names and usage, seems to have regarded the tone of the voice; the acute accent raising the voice in some certain sylables to a higher, i. e. more acute pitch or tone, and the grave depressing it lower, and both having some emphasis, i. e. more vigorous pronunciation. Holder's Elem.

3. Poetically, language or words

Now many apes hence
Shall this our lofty scene be acted o'er,
In states unborn, and accents yet unknown. Shak. Jul. Cæsar.

Words on your wings to heav'n her accents bear
Such words as heav'n alone is fit to hear. Dryd. Virg. Past 3.

4. A modification of the voice, expressive of the passions or sentiments.

The tender accent of a woman's cry
Will pass unheard, will unregarded die,
When the rough seaman's louder shouts prevail,
When fair occasion shews the springing gale. Prior.

To ACCENT. v. a. [from accentus, Lat.]

1. To pronounce, to speak words with particular regard to the musical marks or rules.

Having got somebody to mark the last sylable but one, where it is long, in words above two sylables (which is enough to regulate her pronunciation, and accenting the words) let her read daily in the gospels, and avoid understanding them in Latin, if she can. Locke on Education, § 177.

2. In poetry, to pronounce or utter in general.

O my unhappy lines! you that before
Have serv'd my youth to vent some wanton cries,
And, now congeal'd with grief, can scarce implore
Strength to accent, here my Albertus dies! Wotton.

3. To write or note the accents.

To ACCE'NTUATE. v. a. [accentuer, Fr.] To place the proper accents over the vowels

ACCENTUA'TION. n. f. [from accentuate.]

1. The act of placing the accent in pronunciation.

2. Marking the accent in writing

To ACCEPT. v. a. [accipio, Lat. accepter, Fr.]

1. To take with pleasure, to receive kindly, to admit with approbation. It is distinguished from receive, as specific from general; noting a particular manner of receiving.

Neither do ye kindle fire on my altar for nought. I have no pleasure in you, saith the Lord of hosts, neither will I accept an offering at your hand. Malachi, i. 10.

Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but, in every nation, he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him. Acts, x. 34, 35.

You have been graciously pleased to accept this tender of my duty. Dryden's Dedication to his Fables.

Charm by accepting, by submitting sway,
Yet have your honour most when you obey. Pope.

2. It is used in a kind of juridical sense; as, to accept terms, accept a treaty

His promise Palamon accepts, but pray'd
To keep it better than the first he made. Dryden's Fables.

3. In the language of the bible, to accept persons, is to act with personal and partial regard.

He will surely reprove you, if ye do secretly accept persons. Job, xiii. 10.

4. It is sometimes used with the particle of.

I will appease him with the present that goeth before me, and afterward I will see his face, peradventure he will accept of me. Genesis, xxxii. 20.

ACCEPTABILITY. n. f. The quality of being acceptable. See ACCEPTABLE.

He hath given us his natural blood to be shed, for the remission of our sins, and for the obtaining the grace and acceptability of repentance. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

ACCE'PTABLE. adj. [acceptable, Fr. from the Latin.] It is pronounced by some with the accent in the first sylable, as by Milton; by others, with the accent on the second.

1. That which is likely to be accepted; grateful, pleasing. It is used with the particle to before the person accepting

This woman, whom thou mad'st to be my help,
And gav'st me as thy perfect gift, so good,
So fit, so acceptable, so divine,
That from her hand I could expect no ill. Parad. Lost, b. ix.

I do not see any other method left for men of that function to take, in order to reform the world, than by using all honest arts to make themselves acceptable to the laity. Swift's Proj. &c.

After he had made a peace so acceptable to the church, and so honourable to himself, he spent the remainder of his life at Rheims, and died with an extraordinary reputation of sanctity. Addison on Italy.

ACCE'PTABLENESS. n. f. [from acceptable.] The quality of being acceptable.

It will thereby take away the acceptableness of that conjunc-

ACCE'PTABLY. adv. [from acceptable] In an acceptable manner; so as to please, with the particle to. For the accent, see ACCEPTABLE

Do not omit thy prayers, for want of a good oratory; for he that prayeth upon God's account, cares not what he suffers, so he be the friend of Christ, nor where nor when he prays, so he may do it frequently, fervently, and acceptably. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

If you can teach them to love and respect other people, they will, as your age requires it, find ways to express it acceptably to every one. Locke on Education, § 145.

ACCE'PTANCE. n. f. [acceptance, Fr.]

By that acceptance of his sovereignty, they also accepted of his laws; why then should any other laws be now used amongst them? Spenser's State of Ireland.

If he tells us his noble deeds, we must also tell him our noble some men cannot be sooth with so good acceptance as others. South's Sermons.

Thus I emboldened spake, and freedom us'd
Permissive, and acceptance found. Par. Lost, b. v. l. 435.

2. The meaning of a word as it is received or understood, acceptation.

That pleasure is man's chiefest good, because indeed it is the perception of good that is properly pleasure, is an assertion most certainly true, though, under the common acceptance of it, not only false but ominous; for, according to this, pleasure and sensuality pass for terms equivalent, and therefore he, who takes it in this sense, alters the subject of the discourse. South.

ACCEPTANCE. [in law] The receiving of a rent, whereby the giver avoids himself, for ever, to allow a former fact done by another, whether it be in itself good or not. Cowel.

ACCEPTATION. n. s. [from accept]

1. Reception, whether good or bad. This large sense seems now wholly out of use.

Yet, poor soul, knows he no other, but that I do suspect, neglect, yea, and detest him? For, every day, he finds one way or other to set forth himself unto me, but all are rewarded with like coldness of acceptation. Sidney, b. i.

What is new finds better acceptation, than what is good of course. Denham's Sophy.

Good reception, acceptance.

Cain, envious of the acceptation of his brother's prayer and service, slew him, making himself the first manslayer, and his brother the first martyr. Raleigh's History of the World, b. i.

3. The state of being acceptable, regard.

Some things, although not so required of necessity, that, to leave them undone, excludeth from salvation, are, notwithstanding, of so great dignity and acceptation with God, that most ample reward in heaven is laid up for them. Hooker, b. i.

They have those enjoyments only as the consequences of the state of esteem and acceptation they are in with their parents and governours. Locke on Education, § 53.

4. [illegible]

As, in order to the passing away a thing by gift, there is required [illegible] there is required also an acceptation on his part to whom it is given.

5. The meaning of a word, as it is commonly received.

Thereupon the earl of Lauderdale made a discourse upon the several questions, and what acceptation those words and expressions had Clarendon, b. viii.

All matter is either fluid or solid, in a large acceptation of the words, that they may comprehend even all the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid successive motion of the particles of bodies. Bentl. Serm.

An ACCEPTER. n. s. [from accept] The person that accepts.

[illegible] n. s. [acceptilatio, Lat.] A term of the civil [illegible] porting the remission of a debt by an acquittance from the creditor, testifying the receipt of money which has never been paid.

ACCEPTION. [acception, Fr. from acceptio, Lat.] The received sense of a word; the meaning

That this hath been esteemed the due and proper acception of this word, I shall testify by one evidence, which gave me the first hint of this notion. Hammond on Fundamentals

ACCESS. n. s. [In some of its senses, it seems derived from accessus, in others, from accessio, Lat. accès, Fr.]

1. The way by which any thing may be approached.

There remained very advantageous accesses for temptations to enter and invade men, the fortifications being very slender, little knowledge of immortality, or any thing beyond this life, and no assurance that repentance would be admitted for sin. Hammond on Fundamentals

And here th' access a gloomy grove defends;
And here th' unnavigable lake extends
O'er whose unhappy waters, void of light,
No bird presumes to steer his airy flight. Dryd. Æneid vi.

2. The means, or liberty, of approaching either to things or men.

When we are wrong'd, and would unfold our griefs,
We are denied access unto his person,
Even by those men that most have done us wrong.
Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. 2

They go commission'd to require a peace,
And carry presents to procure access. Dryd. Æn. [illegible] 209.
He grants what they besought,
Instructed, that to God's no access
Without Mediator, whose high office now
Moves in figure bears. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii. l. 239.

3. Increase, enlargement. Not in use.

The gold was accumulated, and store treasure, for the most part, but the silver is still growing. Besides, infinite is the access of territory and empire by the same enterprise.
Bacon's Holy War.

Although to opinion, there be many gods, may seem an access in religion, and such as cannot at all consist with atheism, yet doth it deductively, and upon inference, include the same; for unity is the inseparable and essential attribute of Deity.
Prior's Vulgar Errours, b. [illegible] c. 10.

Nor think superfluous their aid,
I, from the influence of thy looks, receive
Access in every virtue, in thy sight
More wise, more watchful, stronger. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Of various actions past, if not kept up
With an access, and fresh supply, of new ones,
Is lost and soon forgotten. Denham's Sophy.

4. It is sometimes used, after the French, to signify the returns of fits of a distemper; but this sense seems [illegible] scarcely received into our language.

For as relapses make diseases
More desperate than their first accesses. Hudibras, p. [illegible]

ACCESSARINESS. n. s. [from accessary.] The state of being accessary.

Perhaps this will draw us into a negative accessariness to the mischiefs. Decay of Piety.

ACCESSARY. adj. [A corruption, as it seems, of the word accessory, which see, but now more commonly used than the proper word.]

That which, without being the chief agent in a crime, contributes to it. But it had formerly a good and general sense.

As for those things that are accessary hereunto, those things that so belong to the way of salvation, &c. Hooker, b. iii. § 3.

He had taken upon him the government of Hull, without any apprehension or imagination, that it would ever make him accessary to rebellion. Clarendon, b. viii.

ACCESSIBLE. adj. [accessibilis, Lat. accessible, Fr.] That which may be approached; that which we may reach or arrive at.

It is applied both to persons and things, with the particle to.

In conversation, the tempers of men are open and accessible, their attention is awake, and their minds disposed to receive the strongest impressions; and what is spoken is generally more affecting, and more apposite to particular occasions. Rogers.

As an island, we are accessible on every side, and exposed to perpetual invasions, against which it is impossible to fortify ourselves sufficiently, without a power at sea. Addison's Freeholder.

Those things, which were indeed inexplicable, have been racked and tortured to discover themselves, while the plainer and more accessible truths, as if despicable while easy, are clouded and obscured. Decay of Piety.

Some lie more open to our senses and daily observation; others are more occult and hidden, and though accessible, in some measure, to our senses, yet not without great search and scrutiny, or some happy accident. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ACCESSION. n. s. [accessio, Lat. accession, Fr.]

1. Increase by something added, enlargement, augmentation.

There would not have been found the difference here set down betwixt the force of the air, when expanded, and what that force should have been according to the theory, but that the wounded inch of air received some little accession during the trial. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

The wisest among the nobles began to apprehend the growing power of the people, and therefore, knowing what an accession thereof would accrue to them, by such an [illegible] property, used all means to prevent it.
Swift on the Contests in Athens and Rome.

Charity, indeed, and works of munificence are the proper discharge of such over-proportioned accessions, and the only virtuous enjoyment of them. Rogers's Sermons, ii. p. 3.

2. The act of coming to, or joining one's self to, as, accession to a confederacy.

Beside, what wise objections he prepares
Against my late accession to the wars?
Does not the fool perceive his argument
Is with more force against Achilles bent? Dryden's Fables.

3. The act of arriving at, as, the king's accession to the throne.

ACCESSORILY. adv. [from accessory.] In the manner of an accessory.

ACCESSORY. adj. Joined to another thing, so as to increase [illegible] Addition.

In this kind there is not the least action, but it doth somewhat make to the accessory augmentation of our bliss. Hooker.

ACCESSORY. n. s. [accessorius, Lat. accessoire, Fr. This word, which has anciently a general signification, is now almost confined to forms of law.]

1. Applied to persons.

A man that is guilty of a felonious offence, not principally, but by participation, as, by commandment, advice, or concealment. And a man may be accessory to the offence of another, after two sorts, by the common law, or by statute: and, by the common law, two ways also; that is, before or after the fact. Before the fact; as, when one commandeth or adviseth another to commit a felony, and is not present at the execution thereof, for his presence makes him also a principal: wherefore there cannot be an accessory before the fact in manslaughter; because manslaughter is sudden and not prepensed. Accessory after the fact, is, when one receiveth him, whom he knoweth to have committed felony. Accessory by statute, as he that abets, counsels, or hides any man committing, or having committed an offence made felony by statute. Cowel.

By the common law, the accessories cannot be proceeded against, till the principal has received his trial. Sprat. State of Irel.

But pause, my soul! and study, ere thou fall
[illegible] accidentals, th' essential.
[illegible]
A trial, must the principal be
Now were all transform'd
Alike, to serpents all, as accessories
To his bold riot. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l.

2. Applied

A C C

2. Applied to things

An accessory is said to be that which does accede unto some principal fact or thing in law; and, as such, generally speaking, follows the reason and nature of its principal.

Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

ACCIDENCE n. s. [a corruption of accidents, from accidentia, Lat.] The little book containing the first rudiments of grammar, and explaining the properties of the eight parts of speech.

I do confess I do want eloquence,
And never yet did learn mine accidence. Taylor the Water-poet.

A'CCIDENT. n. s. [accidens, Lat.]

1. The property or quality of any being, which may be separated from it, at least in thought.

If she were but the body's accident,
And her foe being did in it subsist,
As white in snow, she might herself absent,
And in the body's substance not be miss'd. Sir John Davies.

An accidental mode, or an accident, is such a mode as is not necessary to the being of a thing; for the subject may be without it, and yet remain of the same nature that it was before, or it is that mode which may be separated or abolished from its subject. Watts's Logick.

2. In grammar, the property of a word.

The learning of a language is nothing else but the informing of ourselves, what compositures of letters are, by consent and institution, to signify such certain notions of things, with their modalities and accidents. Holder's Elements of Speech.

3. That which happens unforeseen, casualty, chance.

General laws are like general rules in physic, according whereunto, as no wise man will desire himself to be cured, if there be joined with his disease some special accident, in regard whereof, that whereby others in the same infirmity, but without the like accident, recover health, would be, to him, either hurtful, or, at the least, unprofitable. Hooker, b. v. § 9.

The flood, and other accidents of time, made it one common field and pasture with the land of Essex. Raleigh's Hist. World.

Thus we rejoic'd, but soon our joy is turn'd
Into perplexity, and new amaze;
For whether is he gone? What accident
Hath rapt him from us? Paradise Regained, b. i.

And trivial accidents shall be forborn,
That others may have time to take their turn. Dryd. Fables.

The reformation owed nothing to the good intentions of king Henry. He was only an instrument of it (as the logicians speak) by accident. Sir J. Mackintosh.

ACCIDE'NTAL. n. s. [accidental, Fr. See ACCIDENT.] A property not Conceive, as much as you can, of the essentials of any subject, before you consider its accidentals. Watts's Logick.

ACCIDE'NTAL. adj. [from accident.]

1. Having the quality of an accident, nonessential, used with the particle to, before that in which the accident inheres.

A distinction is to be made between what pleases naturally in itself, and what pleases upon the account of machines, actors, dances, and circumstances, which are merely accidental to the tragedy. Rymer's Tragedies of the last Age.

This is accidental to a state of religion, and therefore ought to be reckoned among the ordinary difficulties of it. Tillotson.

2. Casual, fortuitous, happening by chance.

'Tis by sir's not accidental, but a trade. Shakesp. Meas for Meas.

So shall you hear
Of accidental judgments, casual slaughters;
Of deaths put on by cunning, and forc'd cause. Shakesp. Hen.

Look upon things of the most accidental and mutable nature, accidental in their production, and mutable in their continuance, yet God's prescience of them is as certain in him, as the memory of them is, or can be, in us. South's Sermons.

3. In the following passage it seems to signify adventitious.

Av, such a murder as would to fire,
That adds an accidental fierceness to
Its natural fury. Denham's Sophy.

ACCIDE'NTALLY. adv. [from accidental.]

1. After an accidental manner, nonessentially.

Other needful points of public matters, no less concerning the good of the commonwealth, though but accidentally depending upon the former. Spenser's State of Ireland.

I conclude choler accidentally better, and acrimonious, but not in itself. Harvey on Consumptions.

2. Casually, fortuitously.

Although virtuous men do sometimes accidentally make their way to preferment, yet the world is so corrupted, that no man can reasonably hope to be rewarded in it, merely upon account of his virtue. Swift's Miscellanies.

ACCIDE'NTALNESS. n. s. [from accidental.] The quality of being accidental. Dict.

ACCIPIENT n. s. [accipiens, Lat.] A receiver, perhaps somewhat restricted. Dict.

To ACCI'TE. v. a. [accito, Lat.] To call, to summons, a word not in use.

Our coronation done, we will accite
No prince, no peer, that I have just cause to say,
Heav'n shorten Harry's happy life one day. Shakesp. Henry IV.

ACCLA'IM. n. s. [acclamo, Lat. from which probably first the verb acclaim, now lost, and then the noun.] A shout of praise, acclamation.

Back from pursuit thy pow'rs, with loud acclaim,
Thee only extoll'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii. l. 397.

The herald ends; the vaulted firmament
With loud acclaims, and vast applause, is rent. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

ACCLAMA'TION. n. s. [acclamatio, Lat.] Shouts of applause, such as those with which a victorious army salutes the general.

It hath been the custom of civilian men, in token of the greater reverence, to stand, to utter certain words of acclamation, and, at the name of Jesus, to bow. Hooker, b. v. § 2.

Glauy then he rais'd
Among those friendly pow'rs, who him receiv'd
With joy, and acclamations loud, that one,
That, of so many myriads fall'n, yet one
Return'd, not lost. Milt. Parad. Lost, b. vi.

Such an enchantment is there in words, and so fine a thing does it seem to some, to be ranked plausibly, and to be adhered to their destruction with panegyric and acclamation. South. Ser.

ACCLI'VITY. n. s. [from acclivus, Lat.] The steepness or slope of a line inclining to the horizon, reckoned upwards, as, the ascent of an hill is the acclivity, the descent is the declivity. Quincy.

The men, leaving their wives and younger children below, do, not without some difficulty, clamber up the acclivities, dragging their kine with them, where they feed them, and milk them, and make butter and cheese, and do all the dairy-work. Ray on the Creation.

ACCLI'VOUS. adj. [acclivus, Lat.] Rising with a slope.

To ACCLO'Y. v. a. [See CLOY.]

1. To fill up, in a full sense, to crowd, to stuff full; a word almost obsolete.

At the well-head the purest streams arise:
But muddy filth his branching arms annoys,
And with uncomely weeds the gentle wave accloys. Fairy Q.

2. To fill to satiety, in which sense cloy is still in use.

They that escape best in the temperate zone, would be accloyed with long nights, very tedious, no less than forty days. Ray on the Creation.

To ACCO'IL. v. a. [See COIL.] To crowd, to keep a coil about, to bustle, to be in a hurry; a word now out of use.

About the cauldron many cooks accoil'd,
With hooks and ladles, as need did require,
The while the viands in the vessel boil'd,
They did about their business sweat, and sorely toil'd. Fairy Q.

ACCOLENT n. s. [accolens, Lat.] He that inhabits near a place; a borderer. Dict.

ACCO'MMODABLE. adj. [accommodabilis, Lat.] That which may be fitted, with the particle to.

As there is infinite variety in the circumstances of persons, things, actions, times and places, so we must be furnished with such general rules as are accommodable to all this variety, by a wise judgment and discretion. Watts's Logick.

To ACCO'MMODATE. v. a. [accommodo, Lat.]

1. To supply with conveniences of any kind.

These three,
Three thousand confident, in act as many;
For three performers are the file, when all
The rest do nothing, with this word stand, stand,
Accommodated by the place, (more charming
With their own nobleness, which could have turn'd
A distaff to a lance) gilded pale looks. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

2. With the particle to, to adapt, to fit, to make consistent with.

He had altered many things, not that they were not natural before, but that he might accommodate himself to the age in which he lived. Dryden on Dramatic Poetry.

'Twas his misfortune to light upon an hypothesis, that could not be accommodated to the nature of things, and human affairs; his principles could not be made to agree with that constitution and order which God had settled in the world. Locke.

ACCO'MMODATE. adj. [accommodatus, Lat.] Suitable, fit; used sometimes with the particle for, but more frequently with to.

They are so acted and directed by nature, as to cast their eggs in such places as are most accommodate for the exclusion of their young, and where there is food ready for them so soon as they be hatched. Ray on the Creation.

In these cases, we examine the why, the what, and the how, of things, and propose means accommodate to the end. L'Estrange.

God did not primarily intend to appoint this way of worship, and to impose it upon them as that which was most proper and [illegible], but that he condescended to it as most accommodate [illegible] present state and incarnation. Tillotson Serm.

ACCO'MMODATELY. adv. [from accommodate.] Suitably, fitly.

ACCOMMODA'TION. n. s. [from accommodate.]

1. Provision of conveniences.

2. In the plural, conveniences, things requisite to ease or refreshment.

The king's commissioners were to have such accommodations, as the other thought fit to leave to them, who had been very civil to the king's commissioners. Clarendon, b. viii.

3. Adaptation, fitness, with the particle to.

The organization of the bodies, with accommodation to its functions, tions, is fitted w th the moſt curious mechaniſm. Hale's Origin.

4. Compoſition of a difference, reconciliation, adjuſtment.

ACCO'MPANABLE. adj [from accompany.] Sociable; a word now not uſed.

A ſhow, as it were, of an accompanable fontaineſs, and of a civil wildneſs. Sidney, b. i

Go viſit her, in her chaſte bower of reſt,
Accompany'd with angel like delights. Spenſer, Sonnet 1.

The great buſineſs of the ſenſes being to make us take notice of what hurts or advantages the body, it is wiſely ordered by nature, that pain ſhould accompany the reception of ſeveral ideas. Locke.

2. To join with.

W th regard to ſheep, as folly is uſually accompanied with perverſeneſs, ſo it is here. There is ſomething ſo monſtrous to dea. in a commod ty, which we are not allowed to export; there is, I ſay, ſomething ſo fooliſh, that it wants a name, in our language, to expreſs it by. Swift's ſhort View of Ireland.

ACCO'MPLICE. n. ſ. [complice, Fr. from complex, a word in the barbarous Latin, much in uſe, Complices fortæ prudentiæ]

1. An aſſociate, a partaker, uſually in an ill ſenſe.

There were ſeveral ſcandalous reports induſtriouſly ſpread by Wood, and his accomplices, to diſcourage all oppoſition againſt his infamous project. Swift.

2. A partner, or co-operator, in a ſenſe indifferent.

If a tongue would be talking without a mouth, what could it have done, when it had all its organs of ſpeech, and accomplices of ſound, about it. Addiſon. Spectator, N° 247.

3. It is uſed with the particle to before a thing, and with before a perſon.

Ch lleſs Arturius, vaſtly rich before,
Thus by h s loſſes multiplies his ſtore,
Suſpected for accomplice to the fire,
That burnt his palace but to build it h gher. Dryd Juv. Sat

Who, ſhould they ſteal, for want of his relief,
He judg'd himſelf accomplice with the thief Dryden's Fables.

To ACCOMPLISH. v. a. [accomplir, Fr. from complea, Lat.]

1. To compleate, to execute fully; as, to accompliſh a deſign.

He that is far off ſhall die of the peſtilence, and he that is near ſhall fall by the ſword, and he that remaineth, and is beſieged, ſhall die by the famine. Thus will I accompliſh my fu y upon them. Ezekiel, vi. 1 .

Th s would be the accompliſhment of their common felicity, in caſe, by their evil, either through deſtiny or advice, they ſuffered not the occaſion to be loſt. Sir John Haywood

He thought it impoſſible to find, in any one body, all thoſe perfections which he ſought for the accompliſhment of a Helena, becauſe nature, in any individual perſon, makes nothing that is perfect in all its parts. Dryden's Dufreſnoy, Pref

2. Completion, as, of a prophecy.

The miraculous ſucceſs of the apoſtles preaching, and the accompliſhment of many of their predictions, which, to thoſe early chriſtians, were matters of faith only, are, to us, matters of ſight and experience. Atterbury's Sermons

3. Embelliſhment, elegance, ornament of mind or body.

Young he rs, and elder brothers, from their own reflect upon the eſtates they are born to, and therefore thinking all other accompliſhments unneceſſary, are of no man er of uſe but to keep up their families. Addiſon. Spectator, N° 123.

4. The act of obtaining any thing

The means ſuggeſted by policy and worldly wiſdom, for the attainment of thoſe earthly enjoyments, are unfit for that purpoſe, not only upon the account of their inſufficiency for, but alſo of their frequent oppoſition and contrariety to, the accompliſhment of ſuch ends. South's Sermons.

ACCO'MPT. n. ſ. [Fr. compter and compte, anciently accompter Skinner.] An account, a reckoning. See ACCOUNT

The ſoul may have time to call itſelf to a juſt accompt of all things paſt, by means whereof repentance is perfected.
Hooker, b. v. § 46.

Each Chriſtmas they accompts did clear;
And wound their bottom round the year. Prior.

ACCO'MPTANT. n. ſ. [accomptant, Fr.] A reckoner, computer. See ACCOUNTANT

ACE. n. ſ. [As not only ſignified a piece of money, but any integer, from whence is derived the word a, or unit. Thus As ſignified the whole inheritance. Arbuthnot on Coins.]

1. An unit; a ſingle point on cards or dice.

When lots are ſhuffled together in a cap, urn, or pitcher; if a man ſhould caſt a die, what reaſon in the world can he have to preſume, that he ſhall draw a white ſtone rather than a black, or throw an ace rather than a ſize. South Sermons.

2. A ſmall quantity.

He will not bate an ace of abſolute certainty; but however doubtful or improbable the thing is, coming from him it muſt go for an indiſputable truth. Government of the Tongue, § 11.

I'll not wag an ear farther: the whole world shall not bribe me to it. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

ACE'PHALOUS. n. a. [ἀκέφαλος, Gr.] Without a head. Dict.

ACE'RB. adj. [acerbus, Lat.] Acid, with an addition of roughness, as moſt fruits are before they are ripe. Quincy.

ACE'RBITY. n. ſ. [acerbitas, Lat.]

1. A rough ſower taſte.
2. Applied to men, ſharpneſs of temper; ſeverity.

True it is, that the talents for criticiſm, namely, ſmartneſs, quick cenſure, vivacity of remark, indeed all but acerbity, ſeem rather the gifts of youth than of old age. Pope's Intr. to Dun.

To ACE'RVATE. v. a. [acervo, Lat.] To heap up. Dict.

ACERVA'TION. n. ſ. [from acervate.] The act of heaping together.

ACE'RVOSE. adj. Full of heaps. Dict.

ACE'SCENT. adj. [acеſcens, Lat.] That which has a tendency to ſourneſs or acidity.

The ſame perſons, perhaps, had enjoyed their health as well with a mixture of animal diet, qualified with a ſufficient quantity of acеſcents, as, bread, vinegar, and fermented liquors. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ACETO'SE. adj. That which has in it acids or vinegar. Dict.

ACETO'SITY. n. ſ. [from acetoſe.] The ſtate of being acetoſe, or of containing vinegar. Dict.

ACE'TOUS. adj. [from acetum, vinegar, Lat.] Having the quality of vinegar, ſour.

Raiſins, which conſiſt chiefly of the juice of grapes, inſpiſſated in the skins or huſks by the avolation of the ſuperfluous moiſture through their pores, being diſtilled in a retort, did not afford any vinous, but rather an acetous ſpirit. Boyle of Spirits.

ACHE. n. ſ. [ace, Sax. ἄχος, Gr. now generally written ake, and in the plural akes, of one ſyllable; the primitive manner being preſerved chiefly in poetry, for the ſake of the meaſure.]

A continued pain. See AKE.

I'll rack thee with old cramps;
Fill all thy bones with aches, make thee roar,
That beaſts ſhall tremble at thy din. Shakeſpeare's Tempeſt.

A coming ſhow'r your ſhooting corns preſage,
Old aches throb, your hollow tooth will rage. Swift's Miſc.

To ACHE. v. n. [See ACHE.] To be in pain.

Upon this account, our ſenſes are dulled and ſpent by any extraordinary intention, and our very eyes will ache, if long fixed upon any difficultly diſcerned object. Glanv. Sceptſi, c. xiv.

To ACHIEVE. v. a. [achever, Fr. to compleat.]

1. To perform, to finiſh a deſign proſperouſly.

Our toils, my friends, are crown'd with ſure ſucceſs:
The greater part perform'd, achieve the leſs. Dryd. Æneid.

2. To gain, to obtain.

Experience is by induſtry achiev'd,
And perfected by the ſwift courſe of time.
Shakeſpeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Tranio, I burn, I pine, I perish, Tranio,
If I achieve not this young modeſt girl.
Shakeſpeare's Taming the Shrew.

Thou haſt achiev'd our liberty, confin'd
Within hell-gates till now. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. ii. l. 368.

Show all the ſpoils by valiant kings achiev'd,
And groaning nations by their arms reliev'd. Prior.

An ACHI'EVER. n. ſ. He that performs; he that obtains what he endeavours after.

[illegible] itſelf, when the achiever brings home full Shakeſpeare's Much ado about Nothing.

A [illegible]

1. The performance of an action.

From every coaſt that heaven walks about,
Have thither come the noble martial crew,
That famous hard achievements ſtill purſue. Fairy Queen, b.

2. The eſcutcheon, or enſigns armorial, granted to any man for the performance of great actions.

Then ſhall the war, and ſtern debate, and ſtrife
Immortal, be the buſineſs of my life;
And in thy fane, the ſpoils among,
High on the burniſh'd roof, my banner ſhall be hung,
Rank'd with my champions bucklers, and below
With arms revers'd, th' achievements of the foe. Dryd. Fab.

Achievement, in the firſt ſenſe, is derived from achieve, as it ſignifies to perform, in the ſecond, from achieve, as it imports to gain.

ACHOR. n. ſ. [achor, Lat. ἀχώρ, Gr. furfur.]

A ſpecies of the herpes, it appears with a cruſty ſcab, which cauſes an itching on the ſurface of the head, occaſioned by a ſalt ſharp ſerum oozing through the ſkin. Quincy.

ACID. adj. [acidus, Lat. aigre, Fr.] Sour, ſharp.

Wild trees laſt longer than garden trees, and in the ſame kind, thoſe whoſe fruit is acid, more than thoſe whoſe fruit is Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 585.

Acid, or ſour, proceeds from a ſalt of the ſame nature, with[illegible] auſtere taſtes the oily parts have not diſcharged themſelves from the ſalts and earthy parts; ſuch is the taſte of unripe fruits. Arbuthnot on aliments.

Liquors and ſubſtances are called acids, which being compoſed of pointed particles, affect the taſte in a ſharp and piercing manner. The common way of trying, whether any particular liquor hath in it any particles of this kind, is by mixing it with ſyrup of violets, which it will turn of a red colour; but if it contains alkaline or lixivial particles, it changes that ſyrup green. Quincy.

ACI'DITY. n. ſ. [from acid.] The quality of being acid; an acid taſte, ſharpneſs, ſourneſs.

Fiſhes, by the help of a diſſolvent liquor, corrode and reduce their meats, skin, bones, and all, into a chylus or cremor, and yet this liquor manifeſts nothing of acidity to the taſte. Ray on the Creation.

When the taſte of the mouth is bitter, it is a ſign of a redundance of a bilious alkali, and demands a quite different diet from the caſe of acidity or ſourneſs. Arbuthnot on [illegible]

ACIDNESS. n. ſ. [from acid.] The quality of being acid, acidity. See ACIDITY.

ACI'DULÆ. n. ſ. [that is, aquæ acidulæ.]

Medicinal ſprings impregnated with ſharp particles, as all the nitrous, chalybeate, and alum-ſprings are. Quincy.

The acidulæ, or medicinal ſprings, emit a greater quantity of their minerals than uſual, and even the ordinary ſprings, which were before clear, freſh and limpid, become thick and turbid, and are impregnated with ſulphur and other minerals, as long as the earthquake laſts. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory, p. 4.

To ACIDULATE. v. a. [aciduler, Fr.] To impregnate or tinge with acids in a ſlight degree.

The muriatic ſcurvy is evidently a diet of freſh unſalted things, watery liquors acidulated, farinaceous eminent ſubſtances, ſour milk, butter, and acid fruits. Arbuthnot on Alim.

To ACKNOWLEDGE. v. a. [a word formed, as it ſeems, between the Latin and Engliſh, from agnoſco, and knowledge, which is deduced from the Saxon, cnapan, to know.]

1. To own the knowledge of; to own any thing or perſon in a particular character.

My people do already know my mind,
And will acknowledge you and Jeſſica,
In place of lord Baſſanio and myſelf. Shakeſp. Mer. of Ven.

None that acknowledge God, or providence,
Their ſouls eternity did ever doubt. Sir John Davies.

2. To confeſs; as, a fault.

For I acknowledge my tranſgreſſions; and my ſin is ever before me. Pſalm l. 3.

3. To own; as, a benefit; ſometimes with the particle to before the perſon conferring the benefit.

[illegible]
Taught them; but they his gifts acknowledg'd not. Par. Loſt.

In the firſt place, therefore, I thankfully acknowledge to the Almighty power the aſſiſtance he has given me in the beginning, and the proſecution of my preſent ſtudies. Dryden's Æneis.

ACKNOWLEDGING. adj. [from acknowledge.] Grateful, ready to acknowledge benefits received.

He has ſhewn his hero acknowledging and ungrateful, compaſſionate and hard-hearted, but, at the bottom, fickle and ſelf intereſted. Dryden's Virgil, Dedication.

ACKNO'WLEDGMENT. n. ſ. [from acknowledge.]

1. Confeſſion of any character in another; as, exiſtence, ſuperiority.

The due contemplation of the human nature doth, by a neceſſary connexion and chain of cauſes, carry us up to the unavoidable acknowledgment of the Deity; becauſe it carries every thinking man to an original of every ſucceſſive individual. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. Confeſſion of the truth of any poſition.

Immediately upon the acknowledgment of the chriſtian faith, the eunuch was baptized by Philip. Hooker, b. [illegible]

3. Confeſſion of a fault.
4. Confeſſion of a benefit received, gratitude.
5. Act of atteſtation to any conceſſion, ſuch as homage.

There be many wide countries in Ireland, in which the laws of England were never eſtabliſhed, nor any acknowledgment of ſubjection made. Spenſer's State of Ireland.

The ſecond is an acknowledgment to his majeſty for the leave of fiſhing upon his coaſts; and though this may not be grounded upon any treaty, yet, if it appear to be an ancient right on our ſide, and cuſtom on theirs, not determined or extinguiſhed by any treaty between us, it may with juſtice be inſiſted on. Temple's Miſcellanies.

ACME. n. ſ. [ἀκμὴ, Gr.]

The height of any thing; more eſpecially uſed to denote the height of a diſtemper, which is divided into four periods. 1. The arche, the beginning or firſt attack. 2. Anabaſis, the growth. 3. Acme, the height. And, 4. Paracme, which is the decenſion of the diſtemper. Quincy.

ACOLOTHIST. n. ſ. [κακολουθία, Gr.] One of the loweſt order in the Romiſh church, whoſe office is to prepare the elements for the offices, to light the church, &c.

In the Romiſh communion it is duty, according to the papal law, when the biſhop ſings maſs, to order all the inferior clergy to appear in their proper habits, and to ſee that all the offices of the church be rightly performed, to ordain the acolothiſt, to keep the ſacred veſſels, &c. Ayliffe's Parergon.

A'COLYTE. n. f. The ſame with ACOLOTHIST.

ACONITE n. f. [aconitum, Lat.] Properly the herb wolf's-bane, but commonly uſed in poetical language for poiſon in general.

Our land is from the rage of tygers freed,
Nor nouriſhes the lion's angry feed;
Nor pois'nous aconite is here produc'd,
Or grows unknown, or is, when known, refus'd. Dryd. Virg.

Deſpair, that aconite does prove,
And certain death to others, love,
That poiſon never yet withſtood,
Does nourith mine, and turns to blood. Granville's Poems.

A'CORN. n. f. [Æcepn, Sax. from æc, an oak, and copn, corn or grain; that is, the grain of the oak.]

The ſeed or fruit born by the oak.

What roots old-age contracteth into errours, and how ſuch as are but acorns in our younger brows, grow oaks in our older heads, and become inflexible. Brown's Pref. to Vulgar Errours.

Content with food which nature freely bred,
On wildings and on ſtrawberries they fed;
Cornels and bramble-berries gave the reſt,
And falling acorns furniſh'd out a feaſt. Dryden's Ovid.

He that is nouriſhed by the acorns he picked up under an oak, or the apples he gathered from the trees in the wood, has certainly appropriated them to himſelf. Locke.

ACOU'STICKS. n. f. [Ἀκουστικὸς, of ἀκούω, Gr. to hear.]

1. The doctrine or theory of ſounds.
2. Medicines to help the hearing. Quincy.

To ACQUAINT. v. a. [accointer, Fr.]

1. To make familiar with; applied either to perſons or things.

We that acquaint ourſelves with ev'ry zone,
And paſs the tropicks, and behold each pole;
When we come home, are to ourſelves unknown,
And unacquainted ſtill with our own ſoul. Sir J. Davies.

There with thee, new welcome gueſt,
Like fortunes may her ſoul acquaint;
With thee there clad in radiant ſheen. Mil. on March. Wife.

Before a man can ſpeak on any ſubject, it is neceſſary to be acquainted with it. Locke on Education, § 171.

Acquaint yourſelves with things ancient and modern, natural, civil, and religious, domeſtic and national; things of your own and foreign countries; and, above all, be well acquainted with God and yourſelves, learn animal nature, and the workings of your own ſpirits. Watts's Logick.

2. To inform.

But for ſome other reaſons, my grave Sir,
Which is not fit you know, I not acquaint
My father of this buſineſs. Shakeſpeare's Twelfth Night.

I have lately received a letter from a friend in the country, wherein he acquaints me, that two or three men of the town are got among them, and have brought down particular words and phraſes, which were never before in thoſe parts. Tatler.

ACQUA'INTANCE. n. f. [accointance, Fr.]

1. The ſtate of being acquainted with; familiarity, knowledge. It is applied as well to perſons as things, with the particle with.

Nor was his acquaintance leſs with the famous poets of his age, than with the noblemen and ladies. Dryd.

Our admiration of a famous man leſſens upon our nearer acquaintance with him; and we ſeldom hear of a celebrated perſon, without a catalogue of ſome notorious weakneſſes and infirmities. Auth. Spectator, N° 251.

Would we be admitted into an acquaintance with God let us ſtudy to reſemble him. We muſt be partakers of a divine nature, in order to partake of this high privilege and alliance. Atterbury's Sermons.

2. Familiar knowledge, ſimply without a prepoſition.

A brave ſoldier, pardon me,
That any accent breaking from my tongue,
Should 'ſcape the true acquaintance of mine ear. Shak. K. John.

This keeps the underſtanding long in converſe with an object, and long converſe brings acquaintance. South's Sermons.

In what manner he lived with thoſe who were of his neighbourhood and acquaintance, how obliging his carriage was to them, what kind offices he did, and was always ready to do them, I forbear particularly to ſay. Atterbury's Sermons.

3. A ſlight or uſual knowledge, ſhort of friendſhip, as applied to perſons.

I hope I am pretty near ſeeing you, and therefore I would cultivate an acquaintance; becauſe if you do not know me when we meet, you need only keep one of my letters, and compare it with my face; for my face and letters are counterparts of my heart. Swift to Pope, Letter xi.

A long noviciate of acquaintance ſhould precede the vows of friendſhip. Temple.

4. The perſon with whom we are acquainted, him of whom we have ſome knowledge, without the intimacy of friendſhip.

In this ſenſe, the plural is, in ſome authors, acquaintance, in others acquaintances.

But ſhe, all vow'd unto the red-croſs knight,
His wand'ring perſon cloſely did lament,
Ne in this new acquaintance could delight,
But her dear heart with anguiſh did torment. F. Queen, b. i.

That young men travel under ſome tutor, I allow well, ſo that he be ſuch a one that may be able to tell them, what acquaintances they are to ſeek, what exerciſes or diſcipline the place yieldeth. Bacon, Eſſay xix.

This, my lord, has juſtly acquired you as many friends, as there are perſons who have the honour to be known to you; meer acquaintance you have none, you have drawn them all into a nearer line; and they who have converſed with you, are for ever after invincibly yours. Dryd. Juvenal, Dedic.

We ſee he is aſhamed of his neareſt acquaintances. Boyle againſt Bentley.

ACQUAINTED. [from acquaint.] Familiar, well known; not new.

Now call we our high court of parliament;
That war or peace, or both at once, may be
As things acquainted and familiar to us. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

ACQUEST. n. f. [acqueſt, Fr. from acquerir, written by ſome acquiſt, with a view to the word acquire, or acquiſita.]

Attachment, acquiſition; the thing gained.

New acqueſts are more burden than ſtrength. Bac. Hen. VII.

Mud, repoſed near the oſtia of thoſe rivers, makes conſiderable additions to the land, thereby excluding the ſea, and preſerving theſe ſhells as trophies and ſigns of its new acqueſts and encroachments. Woodward's Nat. Hiſt. p.

To ACQUIE'SCE. v. n. [acquieſcer, Fr. acquieſcere, Lat.] To reſt in, or remain ſatisfied with, without oppoſition or diſcontent.

Neither a bare approbation of, nor a mere wiſhing, not unactive complacency in; nor, laſtly, a natural inclination to things virtuous and good, can paſs before God for a man's willing of ſuch things; and, conſequently, if men, upon this account, will needs take up and acquieſce in any ungrounded perſuaſion, that they will thoſe things which really they not will, they fall thereby into a groſs and fatal deluſion. South.

He hath employed his tranſcendent wiſdom and power, that by theſe he might make way for his benignity, as the end wherein they intimately acquieſce. Grew's Coſmolog. Sa. b. i.

ACQUIE'SCENCE. n. f. [from acquieſce.]

1. A ſilent appearance of content, diſtinguiſhed on one ſide from avowed conſent, on the other from oppoſition.

Neither from any of the nobility, nor of the clergy, who were thought moſt averſe from it, there appeared any ſign of contradiction to that, but an entire acquieſcence in all the biſhops thought fit to do. Clarendon.

2. Satisfaction, reſt, content.

Many indeed have given over their purſuits after fame, either from diſappointment, or from experience of the little pleaſure which attends it, or the better informations or natural coldneſs of old-age, but ſeldom from a full ſatisfaction and acquieſcence in their preſent enjoyments of it. Addiſ. Spectator, N° 256.

3. Submiſſion.

The greateſt part of the world take up their perſuaſions concerning good and evil, by an implicit faith, and a full acquieſcence in the word of thoſe, who ſhall repreſent things to them under theſe characters. South's Sermons.

ACQUIRABLE. adj. [from acquire.] That which may be acquired or obtained, attainable.

Thoſe rational inſtincts, the connate principles engraven in the human ſoul, though they are truths acquirable and deducible by rational conſequence and argumentation, yet they ſeem to be inlaid in the very cruſts and texture of the ſoul, antecedent to any acquiſition by induſtry or the exerciſe of the diſcurſive faculty in man. Hales's Origin of Mankind.

If the powers of cogitation and volition, and ſenſation, are neither inherent in matter as ſuch, nor acquirable to matter by any motion or modification of it, it neceſſarily follows, that they proceed from ſome cogitative ſubſtance, ſome incorporeal inhabitant within us, which we call ſpirit and ſoul. Bentley.

To ACQUIRE. v. a. [acquerir, Fr. acquiro, Lat.] To gain by one's own labour or power; to obtain what is not received from nature, or tranſmitted by inheritance.

I've done enough. A lower place note well,
May make too great an act: for learn this, Silius,
Better to leave undone, than by our deed
Acquire too high a fame, when he, we ſerve, 's away.
Shakeſpeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

ACQUI'RED. part. p. adj. [from acquire.] Gained by one's own, in oppoſition to thoſe things which are beſtowed by nature.

We are ſeldom at eaſe, and free enough from the ſolicitation of our natural or adopted deſires, but a conſtant ſucceſſion of uneaſineſſes, out of that ſtock, which natural wants, or acquired habits, have heaped up, take the wall in their turns. Locke.

An ACQUI'RER. n. f. [from acquire.] The perſon that acquires; a gainer.

An ACQUI'REMENT. n. f. [from acquire.] That which is acquired; gain; attainment. The word may be properly uſed in oppoſition to the gifts of nature.

Thoſe his acquirements, by induſtry, were exceedingly both enriched and enlarged by many excellent endowments of nature. Howard on Edward VI.

By a content and acquieſcence in every ſpecies of truth, we em-brace embrace the shadow thereof or so much as may palliate its want and substantial acquirements. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i.

It is very difficult to lay down rules for the acquirement of such a taste as that I am here speaking of. The faculty must, in some degree, be born with us. Addison. Spectator, N° 409.

ACQUISITION. n. f. [acquisitio, Lat.]

2. The act of acquiring or gaining.

Each man has but a limited right to the good things of the world; and the natural allowed way, by which he is to compass the possession of these things, is by his own industrious acquisition of them. South's Sermons.

2. The thing gained, acquirement.

Give sir, as acquisition
Of glory as of empire, here I lay before
Your royal feet. Denham's Sophy.

A state can never arrive to its period in a more deplorable crisis, than when some prince lies hovering like a vulture to dismember its dying carcase; by which means it becomes only an acquisition to some mighty monarchy, without hopes of a re- [illegible] Sir W. Temple's Miscellanea.

ACQUISITIVE. adj. [acquisitus, Lat.] That which is acquired or gained.

He died not in his acquisitive but in his native soil; nature herself, as it were, claiming a final interest in his body, when fortune had done with him. Wotton.

ACQUIST. n. f. [See ACQUEST.] Acquirement; attainment; gain.

His servant he with new acquist
Of true experience from this great event,
With peace and consolation hath dismist. Mr Sampson Agon.

To ACQUIT. v. a. [acquiter, Fr. See QUIT.]

1. To set free.

Ne do I wish (for w shing were but vain)
To be acquit from my continual smart;
But joy her thrall for ever to remain,
And yield for pledge my poor captived heart. Spenf. Son. xlv.

2. To clear from a charge of guilt; to absolve, opposed to condemn, either simply with an accusative, as, the jury acquitted him, or with the particles from or of, which is more common, before the crime.

If I sin, then thou markest me, and thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity. Job, x. 14.

By the suffrage of the most and best he is already acquitted, and, by the sentence of some, condemned
Dryden's Conquest of Granada, Dedic.

He that judges, without informing himself to the utmost that he is capable, cannot acquit himself of judging amiss. Locke.

Neither do I reflect upon the memory of his majesty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation upon this matter. Swift.

3. To clear from any obligation.

Steady to my principles, and not disquieted with my affections, I have, by the blessing of God on my endeavours, overcome all difficulties; and, in some measure, acquitted myself of the debt which I owed the publick, when I undertook this work. Dryden.

4. In a singular sense, it is said The man hath acquitted himself well, that is, he discharges his duty.

ACQUITMENT. n. f. [from acquit.] The state of being acquitted, or act of acquitting.

The word imports properly an acquitment or discharge of a man upon some precedent accusation, and a full trial and cognizance of his cause had thereupon. South's Sermon.

ACQUITTAL, n. f. in law, is a deliverance and setting free from the suspicion or guiltiness of an offence. Cowell

The constant design of both these orators, was to [illegible] some one particular point, either the condemnation [illegible] of an accused person, a persuasive to war, and the like. Swift

To ACQUITTANCE. v. n. To procure an acquittance; to acquit, a word not in present use.

But if black scandal and foul-fac'd reproach,
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your meer enforcement shall acquittance me
From all the impure blots and stains thereof. Shak. Rich. III.

ACQUITTANCE n. f. [from acquit.]

1. The act of discharging from a debt.

But soon shall find
Forbearance, no acquittance, ere day end
Justice shall not return, as beauty, scorn'd. Par. Lost, b. x.

2. A writing testifying the receipt of a debt.

You can produce acquittances
For such a sum, from special officers
Of Charles his father. Shakesp. Love's Labour Lost
They quickly pay their debt, and then
Take no acquittances, but pay again. Donne

They had got a worse trick than that; the same man bought and sold to himself, paid the money, and gave the acquittance. Arbuthnot's Hist of John Bull.

ACRE. n. f. [Æcne, Sax.] A quantity of land containing in length forty perches, and four in breadth, or four thousand eight hundred and forty square yards. Dict.

Search every acre in the high-grown field,
And bring him to our eye. Shakspeare's K. Lear.

ACRID. adj. [acer, Lat.] Of a hot biting taste; bitter, so as to leave a painful heat upon the organs of taste.

Bitter and acrid differ only by the sharp particles of the first, being involved in a greater quantity of oil than those of the last. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ACRIMONIOUS. adj. Abounding with acrimony; sharp; corrosive.

If gall cannot be rendered acrimonious, and bitter of itself, then whatever acrimony or amaritude redounds in it, must be from the admixture of melancholy. Harvey on Consumptions.

ACRIMONY. n. f. [acrimonia, Lat.]

1. Sharpness, corrosiveness.

There be plants that have a milk in them when they are cut; as, figs, old lettuce, sow-thistles, spurge, &c. The cause may be an inception of putrefaction: for those milks have all an acrimony, though one would think they should be lenitive. Bacon's Natural History, N° 639.

The chymists define salt, from some of its properties, to be a body fusible in the fire, congealable again by cold into bright globes or crystals, soluble in water, so as to disappear, not malleable, and having something in it which affects the organs of taste with a sensation of acrimony or sharpness. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Sharpness of temper, severity, bitterness of thought or language.

This made John the Baptist set himself, with so much acrimony and indignation, to baffle this senseless arrogant conceit of theirs, which made them huff at the doctrine of repentance, as a thing below them, and not at all belonging to them. South.

ACRITUDE. n. f. [from acrid.] An acrid taste; a biting heat on the palate.

Green vitriol, mixed with some rays of a pale blue, from the same place; with its astringent and sweetish tastes, is joined some acritude. Grew's Museum.

ACROAMATICAL. adj. [ἀκροάομαι Gr. I hear.] Of or pertaining to deep learning; the opposite of exoterical

ACROATICKS. n. f. [ἀκροατικὰ, Gr.] Aristotle's lectures on the more nice and principal parts of philosophy, to whom none but friends and scholars were admitted by him.

ACRONYCAL, adj. [from ἄκρος, summus, and νὺξ nox; importing the beginning of night.] A term of astronomy, applied to the stars, of which the rising and setting is called acronycal, when they either appear above or sink below the horizon at the time of sunset. It is opposed to cosmical.

ACRONYCALLY. adv. [from acronycal.] At the acronycal time.

He is tempestuous in the summer, when he rises heliacally, and rainy in the winter, when he rises acronycally.

ACROSPIRE n. f. [from ἄκρος and σπεῖρα, Gr.] A shoot or sprout from the end of seeds before they are put in the ground.

Many corns will smut, or have their pulp turned into a substance like thick cream; and most of those which come without extraordinary pains, will send forth their substance in an acrospire. Mort. Husbandry.

ACROSPIRED part. adj. Having sprouts, or having shot out.

For want of turning, when the malt is spread on the floor, it comes and sprouts at both ends, which is called acrospired, and is fit only for swine. Mort. Husbandry.

ACROSS. adv. [from a for at, or the French à, as it is used in a traverse, and cross.]

Athwart, laid over something so as to [illegible]

The harp hath the concave not along the strings, but across the strings, and no harp hath the sound so meeting and prolonged as the Irish harp. Bacon's Nat. Hist N° 22.

Thus view'd, but not enjoy'd, with arms across,
He stood, reflecting on his country's loss. Dryd. Fables.

There is a set of artisans, who, by the help of several poles, which they lay across each others shoulders, build themselves up into a kind of pyramid; so that you see a pile of men in the air of four or five rows rising one above another. Addis. on Italy.

An ACROSTICK. n. f. [from ἄκρος and στίχος, Gr.] A poem in which the first letter of every line being taken, makes up the name of the person or thing on which the poem is written.

ACROSTICK. adj.

1. That which relates to an acrostick.

2. That which contains acrosticks.

Leave writing plays, and choose for thy command
Some peaceful province in acrostick land:
There thou may'st wings display, and altars raise,
And torture one poor word ten thousand ways. Dryden.

ACROTERS, or ACROTERIA. n. f. [In architecture, from Gr. the extremity of any body.] Little pedestals without bases, placed at the middle and the two extremes of pediments, sometimes serving to support statues.

ACT. v. n. [ago, actum, Lat.]

1. To be in action, not to rest.

He hangs between in doubt to act or rest. Pope's Ess. on Man

2. To perform the proper functions.

Albeit the will is not capable of being compelled to any of its actings, yet it is capable of being made to act with more or less of facility, according to the different impressions it receives from motives or objects. South's Sermons

'Tis

3. To practise the arts or duties of life, to conduct one's self

'Tis plain, that she will, for a kingdom now,
Would sacrifice her love, and break her vow,
Not out of love, but interest, acts alone,
And would, ev'n in my arms, act the king of a throne.
Dryden.

The desire of happiness, and the constraint it puts upon us to act for it, no body accounts an abridgment of liberty. Locke.

The splendour of his office, is the token of that sacred character which he inwardly bears, and one of the thought constantly to put him in mind of the other, and e[illegible] up to it, through the whole course of his administration.
Atterbury's Sermons.

It is our part and duty to co-operate with this grace, vigorously to exert those powers, and act up to those advantages in which it restores us. He has given eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame. Rogers's Sermons.

4. To bear a borrowed character, as, a stage-player.

Honour and shame from no condition rise,
Act well your part, there all the honour lies.
Pope's Essay on Man, ep. 4. l. 193.

5. To counterfeit; to feign by action.

His former trembling once again renew'd,
With acted fear the villain thus pursu'd. Dryd. Æn. a. 2.

6. To produce effects in some passive subject.

Hence 'tis we want the wond'rous cause to find
How body acts upon impassive mind. Garth's Dispensary.

The stomach, the intestines, the muscles of the lower belly, all act upon the aliment, besides, the chyle is not sucked, but squeezed into the mouths of the lacteals, by the action of the fibres of the guts. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

7. To actuate; to put in motion, to regulate the movement.

Most people in the world are acted by levity and humour, by strange and irrational changes. South's Sermons.

Perhaps they are as proud as Lucifer, as covetous as Demas, as false as Judas, and, in the whose course of their conversation, act, and are acted not by devotion, but design. Idem.

[illegible] suppose two distinct incommunicable conscious[illegible]
[illegible]e body, the one constantly by day, the other
[illegible], on the other side, the same consciousness acting
[illegible] two distinct bodies Locke.

[illegible]m, Lat.]

1. Something done, a deed, an exploit, whether good or ill.

I've done enough. A lower place, note well,
May make too great an act: for learn this, Silius,
Better to leave undone than by our deed
Acquire too high a fame, when he, we serve, 's away.
Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

The conscious wretch must all his acts, reveal,
Loth to confess, unable to conceal,
From the first moment of his vital breath,
To his last hour of unrepenting death Dryd. Æneid vi.

2. Agency, the power of producing an effect.

I will try the forces
Of these thy compounds on such creatures as
We count not worth the hanging, but none human,
[illegible]y the vigour of them, and apply
[illegible]s to their act, and by them gather
[illegible] several virtues and effects. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

3. Action, the performance of exploits, production of effects.

'Tis so much in your nature to do good, that your life is but one continued act of placing benefits on many, as the sun is always carrying his light to some part or other of the world.
Dryden's Fables, Dedicat.

Who forth from nothing call'd this comely frame,
His will and act, his word and work the same. Pr[illegible]

4. The doing of some particular thing, a step taken; a measure executed.

This act persuades me,
That this remotion of the duke and her,
Is practice only Shakespeare's King Lear.

5. A state of action.

The seeds of herbs and plants at the first are not in act, but in possibility that which they afterwards grow to be. Hooker.

God alone excepted, who actually and everlastingly is whatsoever he may be, and which cannot hereafter be that which now he is not, all other things besides are somewhat in possibility, which as yet they are not in act. Hooker, b. i.

Sure they're conscious
Of some intended mischief, and are fled
To put it into act. Denham's Sophy.

Her legs were buskin'd, and the left before,
In act to shoot, a silver bow she bore. Dryd. Fables.

6. A part of a play, during which the action proceeds without interruption.

Many never doubt but the whole condition required by Christ, the repentance he came to preach, will, in that last scene of their last act, immediately before the exit, be as opportunely and acceptably performed, as at any other point of their lives. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Five acts are the just measure of a play. Roscommon.

7. A decree of a court of justice, or edict of a legislature.

They make edicts for usury to support usurers, repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich, and provide more piercing statutes daily to chain up and restrain the poor.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

You that are king, though he do wear the crown,
Have caus'd him, by new act of parliament,
To blot out me. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p.

8. Record of judicial proceedings.

Judicial acts are all those matters, which relate to judicial proceedings; and being reduced into writing by a publick notary[illegible]
Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

ACTION. n. f. [action, Fr. actio, Lat.]

1. The quality or state of acting, opposite to rest.

O noble English, that could entertain
With half their forces the full power of France,
And let another half stand laughing by,
All out of work, and cold for action. Shakesp. Henry V.

2. An act or thing done, a deed.

This action, I now go on,
Is for my better grace. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

God never accepts a good intention instead of a good action, where that action may be done, nay, so much the contrary, that, if a good inclination be not seconded by a good action, the want of that action is made so much the more criminal and inexcusable. South's Sermons.

3. Agency, operation.

It is better therefore, that the earth should move about its own center, and make those useful vicissitudes of night and day, than expose always the same side to the action of the sun.
Bentley's Sermons.

He has settled laws, and laid down rules, conformable to which natural bodies are governed in their actions upon one another. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

4. The series of events represented in a fable.

This action should have three qualifications. First, it should be but one action, secondly, it should be an entire action, and, thirdly, it should be a great action. Addis. Spectat N° 267.

5. Gesticulation; the accordance of the motions of the body with the words spoken, a part of oratory.

He that speaks doth gripe the hearer's wrist,
While he that hears makes fearful action
With wrinkled brows. Shakesp. King John.

Our orators are observed to make use of less gesture or action than those of other countries. Addison. Spectat. N° 407.

6. [In law.] It is used with the preposition against before the person, and for before the thing.

Actions are personal, real, and mixt. action personal belongs to a man against another, by reason of any contract, offence, or cause, of like force with a contract or offence made or done by him or some other, for whose fact he is to answer. Action real is given to any man against another, that possesses the thing required or sued for in his own name, and no other man's. Action mixt is that which lies as well against or for the thing which we seek, as against the person that hath it, called mixt, because it hath a mixt respect both to the thing and to the person.

Action is divided into civil, penal, and mixt. Action civil is that which tends only to the recovery of that which is due to us, as, a sum of money formerly lent. Action penal is that which aims at some penalty or punishment in the party sued, be it corporal or pecuniary; as, in common law, the next friends of a man feloniously slain shall pursue the law against the murderer. Action mixt is that which seeks both the thing whereof we are deprived, and a penalty also for the unjust detainer of the same.

Action upon the case, is an action given for redress of wrongs done without force against any man, by law not specially provided for.

Action upon the statute, is an action brought against a man upon breach of a statute. Cowell.

There was never man could have a juster action against filthy fortune than I, since all other things being granted me, her blindness is the only let. Sidney.

For our reward then,
First, all our debts are paid; dangers of law,
Actions, decrees, judgments, against us quitted.
Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

7. In the plural, in France, the same as stocks in England.

ACTIONABLE adj. [from action.] That which admits an action in law to be brought against it, punishable.

After he had been thus, as a man would think, quite extinguished, his process was formed; whereby he was found guilty of nought else, that I could learn, which was actionable, but of ambition. Howel's Vocal Forest.

ACTIONARY, or ACTIONIST n. f. [from action.] One that [illegible]hare in action or stocks.

[illegible] AKING. adj. Accustomed to resent by means of law, gious.

A knave, a rascal, an eater of broken meats, a filthy worsted-stocking knave, a lily-liver'd action-taking knave.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

ACTITA'TION. n. f. [from actito, Lat.] Action quick and frequent. Dict.

To A'CTIVATE. v. a. [from active.] To make active. This word is perhaps used only by the author alleged

As snow and ice, especially being dropped, and their cold activated by nature or salt, will turn water into ice, and that in a few hours, so it may be, it will turn wood or stiff clay into stone, in longer time. Bacon's Nat. History, N° 65

A'CTIVE. adj. [activus, Lat.]

1. That which has the power or quality of acting

These particles have not only a vis inertiæ, accompanied with such passive laws of motion, as naturally result from that force, but also they are moved by certain active principles such as is that of gravity, and that which causes fermentation, and the cohesion of bodies. Newton's Opticks

2. That which acts, opposed to passive, or that which suffers.

— When an even flame two hearts did touch,
His office was indulgently to fit
Actives to passives, correspondency
Only he's subject was. Donne.

If you think that by multiplying the ingraments in the same proportion, that you multiply the one, the work will follow, you may be deceived for quantity in the passive will add more resistance than the quantity in the active will add force. Boyle's Physical Remains

3. Busy, engaged in action, opposed to idle or sedentary, or any state of which the duties are performed only by the mental powers.

'Tis virtuous action that must praise bring forth,
With out which, slow advice is little worth,
Yet they who give good counsel, praise deserve,
Though in the active part they cannot serve. Sir J. Denham.

4. Practical, not merely theoretical.

The world hath had in these men fresh experience, how dangerous such active errors are. Hooker, Preface.

Nimble, agile, quick.

Some bend the stubborn bow for victory;
And some with darts their active sinews try. Dryd. Æn.

6. In grammar.

A verb active is that which signifies action, as does, I teach. Clarke's Latin Grammar

A'CTIVELY. adv. [from active.] In an active manner, busily, nimbly. In an active signification, as, the sword is used actively.

A'CTIVENESS. n. s. [from active.] The quality of being active; quickness, nimbleness. This is a word more rarely used than activity.

What strange agility and activeness do our common tumblers and dancers on the rope attain to, by continual exercise? Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

ACTI'VITY. n. s. [from active.] The quality of being active, applied either to things or persons.

Salt put to ice, as in the producing of the artificial ice, exalteth the activity of cold. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 7

Our adversary will not be idle, though we are; he watches every turn of our soul, and meditates of our life, and, if we remit our activity, will take advantage of our indolence. Rogers.

A'CTOR. n. s. [actor, Lat.]

1. He that acts, or performs any thing.

The virtues of either age may correct the defects of both: and good for succession, that young men may be learners, while men in age are actors. Bacon, Essay xiv.

He, who writes an Encomium Neronis, if he does it heartily, is himself but a transcript of Nero in his mind, and would, no doubt, gladly enough see such pranks, as he was famous for, acted again, though he dares not be the actor of them himself. South's Sermons.

2. He that personates a character; a stage-player

Would you have
Such an Hercules an actor in the scene,
And not the hydra? They must sweat no less
To fit their properties, than t'express their parts.
Ben Jonson's Catiline.

When a good actor doth his part present,
In every act he our attention draws,
That at the last he may find just applause. Sir J. Denham.

These false beauties of the stage are no more lasting than a rain-bow, when the actor ceases to shine upon them, when he gives them no longer with his reflection, they vanish in a twinkling. Dryd. Spanish Friar, Ded.

A'CTRESS. n. s. [actrice, Fr.]

1. She that performs any thing.

Virgil has, indeed, admitted Fame as an actress in the Æneid, but the part she acts is very short, and none of the most admired circumstances of that divine work. Addis. Spect.

2. A woman that plays on the stage

We players have met such marriages
We had, for all the world, when human creatures;
And therefore I that was an actress here,
Play all my tricks in hell, a goblin there. Dryd. Tyr. Love

ACTUAL. adj. [actuel, Fr.]

1. That which comprises action.

In this dismembry agitation, besides her walking and other actual performances, what, at any time, have you heard her say? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. Really in act; not merely potential.

Sin, there in pow'r before
Once actual, now in body, and to dwell
Habitual habitant. Milt. Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 587.

3. In act, not purely in speculation.

For he that but conceives a crime in thought,
Contracts the danger of an actual fault
Then what must he expect, that still proceeds
To finish sin, and work up thoughts to deeds?
Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. xiii.

ACTUA'LITY. n. s. [from actual.] The state of being actual

The actuality of these spiritual qualities is thus imprisoned, though their potentiality be not quite destroyed, and thus a mass, extended, impenetrable, passive, divisible, material substance is generated, which we call matter. Chym. Phil. Prin.

A'CTUALLY. adv. [from actual.] In act; in effect, really

All mankind acknowledge themselves able and sufficient to do many things, which actually they never do. South.

Read one of the chronicles written by an author of this frame of mind, and you will think you were reading a history of the kings of Israel or Judah, where the historians were really inspired, and where, by a particular scheme of providence, the kings were distinguished by judgments or blessings, according as they promoted idolatry, or the worship of the true God. Addison. Spectator, N° 453.

Though our temporal prospects should be full of danger, or though the days of sorrow should actually overtake us, yet still we must repose ourselves on God. Rogers, Sermon xi.

ACTUALNESS. n. s. [from actual.] The quality of being actual.

A'CTUARY. n. s. [actuarius, Lat.] The register who compares the minutes of the proceedings of a court, a term of the law

Suppose the judge should say, that he would have the keeping of the acts of court remain with him, and the notary will have the custody of them with himself certainly, in this case, the actuary or writer of them ought to be preferred. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canon.

ACTUATE. adj. [from the verb To actuate.] Put into action; animated, brought into effect

The active informations of the intellect, filling the passive reception of the will, like form closing with matter, grew actuate into a third and distinct perfection of practice. South.

To A'CTUATE. v. a. [from agō, actum, Lat.] To put into action, to invigorate or encrease the powers of motion.

The light made by this animal depends upon a living spirit, and seems, by some vital irradiation, to be actuated into this fulfire. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 6.

Such is every man, who has not actuated the grace given him, to the subduing of every reigning sin. Decay of Piety.

Men of the greatest abilities are most fired with ambition, and, on the contrary, mean and narrow minds are the least actuated by it. Addison. Spectator, N° 255.

Our passions are the springs which actuate the powers of our nature. Rogers, Sermon ix.

ACTUOSE. adj. [from act.] That which hath strong powers of action; a word little used.

To ACUATE. v. a. [acuo, Lat.] To sharpen, to invigorate with any powers of sharpness.

ACU'MINATE. adj. [acuminatus, Lat.] That which has a point or sting, prickly, that which terminates in a sharp point.

ACU'MEN. n. s. [Lat.] A sharp point, figuratively, quickness of intellects.

The word was much affected by the learned Aristarchus in common conversation, to signify genius or natural acumen. Pope's Dunciad, b. iv. notes.

ACUMINATED. particip. adj. Ending in a point; sharp-pointed.

This is not acuminated and pointed, as in the rest, but seemeth, as it were, cut off. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 14.

I appropriate this word, Noli me tangere, to a small round acuminated tubercle, which hath not much pain, unless it be touched or rubbed, or otherways exasperated by topicks. Wiseman's Surgery.

ACUTE. adj. [acutus, Lat.]

1. Sharp, ending in a point, opposed to obtuse or blunt.

Having the ideas of an obtuse and an acute angled triangle, both drawn from equal bases and between parallels, I can, by intuitive knowledge, perceive the one not to be the other, but cannot that way know whether they be equal. Locke.

2. In a figurative sense applied to men, ingenious, penetrating; opposed to dull or stupid.

The acute and ingenious author, among many very fine thoughts, and uncommon reflections, has started the notion of seeing all things in God. Locke.

3. Spoken of the senses, vigorous; powerful in operation.

Were our senses altered, and made much quicker and acuter, the appearance and outward scheme of things would have quite another face to us. Locke.

4. Acute disease. Any disease, which is attended with an increased velocity of blood, and terminates in a few days Quincy.

5. Acute accent, that which raises or sharpens the voice.

ACUTELY. adv. [from acute.] After an acute manner; sharply, it is used as well in the figurative as primitive sense.

He that will look into many parts of Asia and America, will find men reason there, perhaps, as acutely as himself, who yet never heard of a syllogism. Locke.

ACUTENESS. n. f. [from acute, which see.]

1. Sharpness.
2. Force of intellects.

They would not be so apt to think, that there could be nothing added to the acuteness and penetration of their understandings. Locke.

3. Quickness and vigour of senses.

If eyes so framed could not view at once the hand and the hour-plate, their owner could not be benefited by that acuteness, which, whilst it discovered the secret contrivance of the machine, made him lose its use. Locke.

4. Violence and speedy crisis of a malady.

We apply present remedies according to indications, respecting rather the acuteness of the disease, and precipitancy of the occasion, than the rising and setting of stars.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 13.

5. Sharpness of sound.

[illegible]

the bell seems to be at rest, yet the minute parts of it continue in a very brisk motion, without which they could not strike the air. Boyle.

ADA'CTED. participial adj. [adactus, Lat.] Driven by force, a word little used. Dict.

ADAGE. n. f. [adagium, Lat.] A maxim handed down from antiquity, a proverb.

Shallow unimproved intellects, that are confident pretenders to certainty; as if, contrary to the adage, science had no fruit but ignorance. Granville's Scepsis Scientifica.

Fine fruits of learning! old anonymous lore,
Dar'st thou apply that adage of the schools;
As if 'tis nothing worth that lies conceal'd,
And science is not science till reveal'd? Dryd. Pers. Sat. i.

ADAGIO. n. f. [Italian.] A term used by musicians, to mark a slow time.

ADAMANT. n. f. [adamas, Lat. from α and δαμαω, Gr. that is, insuperable, unfrangible.]

1. A stone, imagined by writers, of impenetrable hardness.

So great a fear my name amongst them spread,
That they suppos'd I could rend bars of steel,
And spurn in pieces posts of adamant. Shakesp. Henry V.

Satan, with vast and haughty strides advanc'd,
Came towering, arm'd in adamant, and gold. Parad. Lost.

Who rule the world with absolute decrees,
And write whatever time shall bring to pass,
With pens of adamant, on plates of brass. Dryden's Fables.

2. The diamond.

Hardness, wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, and among them the adamant all other stones, being exalted to that degree thereof, that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it, the factitious stones of chrystals, in imitation, being easily detected by an ordinary eyeglass. Ray on the Creation.

3. Adamant is taken for the loadstone.

Let him change his lodging from one end and part of the town to another, which is a great adamant of acquaintance. Bacon, Essay xx.

You draw me, you hard-hearted adamant!
But yet you draw not iron; for my heart
Is true as steel. Shakespeare's Midsum. Night's Dream.

ADAMANTE'AN adj. [from adamant.] Hard as adamant.

He ran on embattel'd armies clad in iron,
And weaponless himself,
Made arms ridiculous, useless the forgery
Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass,
Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail

This word occurs perhaps only in this passage.

ADAMANTINE. adj. [adamantinus, Lat.]

1. Made of adamant.

Wide is the fronting gate, and rais'd on high
With adamantine columns, threats the sky. Dryd. Æn.

2. Having the qualities of adamant, as, hardness, indissolubility.

Could Jove's weak hand, extended to the tree,
In sunder rend that adamantine chain
Whose golden links, effects and causes be,
And which to God's own chair doth fix'd remain? Davies.

An eternal fiery spirit must have polished the world, wherein all things had been fixed and chastened everlastingly with the adamantine chains of spherical gravity, if the Almighty had not spoken and said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit after its kind, and it was so. Bentley's Sermons.

In adamantine chains shall death be bound,
And hell a grim tyrant feel th' eternal wound. Pope's Messiah.

The dire restraint his wisdom will defeat,
And soon restore him to his regal seat. Pope's Odyssey, b. v.

ADAM'S-APPLE. n. f. [in anatomy.] A prominent part of the throat.

To ADAPT. v. a. [adapto, Lat.] To fit one thing to another, to suit; to proportion.

'Tis true, but let it not be known,
My eyes are somewhat dimmish grown;
For nature, always in the right,
To your decays adapts my sight. Swift's Affectation.

It is not enough that nothing offends the ear, but a good poet will adapt the very sounds, as well as words, to the things he treats of. Pope's Letters.

ADAPTATION. n. f. [from adapt.] The act of fitting one thing to another, the fitness of one thing to another.

Some species there be of middle natures, that is, of bird and beast, as bats, yet are their parts so fit together, that we cannot define the beginning or end of either, there being a commixtion of both, rather than adaptation or cement of the one unto the other. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c.

Their adhesion may be in part ascribed, either to some elastick motion in the pressed glass, or to the exquisite adaptation of the almost numberless, though very small, asperities of the one, and the numerous little cavities of the other; whereby the surfaces so lock in with one another, or are, as it were, clasped together. Boyle.

ADAPTION. n. f. [from adapt.] The act of fitting.

[illegible] were done sufficient work to shew all the necessities, the contrivances, and prudent adaptions, of these admirable machines, for the benefit of the whole. Cheyne's Phil. Princip.

To ADCORPORATE. v. a. [from ad and corpus.] To unite one body with another, more usually wrote incorporate; which see.

To ADD. v. a. [addo, Lat.]

1. To join something to that which was before.

Mark if his birth makes any difference,
If to his words it adds one grain of sense. Dryd. Conq. of Gran.

They, whose noble muses have the highest flown,
Add not to his immortal memory,
But do an act of friendship to their own. Dryd.

2. To perform the mental operation of adding one number or conception to another.

Whatsoever positive ideas a man has in his mind, of any quantity, he can repeat it, and add it to the former, as easily as he can add together the ideas of two days, or two years. Locke.

ADDABLE. adj. [from add.] That which may be added. Addible is more proper.

The first number in every addition is called the addend number, the other, the number or numbers added, and the number invented by the addition, the aggregate or sum. Corker's Arithmetick.

To ADDE'CIMATE. v. a. [addecimo, Lat.] To take or ascertain tithes. Dict.

To ADDE'EM. v. a. [from deem.] To esteem, to account. This word is now out of use.

She scorns to be addeem'd so worthless-base,
As to be mov'd to such an infamy. Daniel's Civil Wars.

ADDER. n. f. [Ættren, Ættop, Nabobe as it seems from ættep, Sax. poison.] A serpent, a viper, a poisonous reptile, perhaps of any species. In common language, adders and snakes are not the same.

Or is the adder better than the eel,
Because his painted skin contents the eye. Shak. As you like it.

An adder did it; for, with doubler tongue
Than thine, thou serpent, never adder stung. Shakespeare's Midsum. Night's Dream.

The adder teaches us where to strike, by her curious and fearful defending of her head. Taylor of living holy.

ADDER'S-GRASS. n. f. The name of a plant, imagined by Skinner to be so named, because serpents lurk about it.

ADDER'S-TONGUE. n. f. [ophioglossum, Lat.] The name of an herb.

It hath no visible flower, but the seeds are produced on a spike, which resembles a serpent's tongue, which seed is contained in many longitudinal cells, which open, and cast forth the seeds when ripe. It grows wild in moist meadows, and is used in medicine. Miller.

The most common simples with us in England, are comfrey, bugle, agrimony, fennel, pauls-betony, fluellin, periwinkle,

[illegible]

ADDER'S-WORT. n. f. An herb so named, on account of its virtue, real or supposed, of curing the bite of serpents.

Your Lordship removes all our difficulties, and supplies all our wants, faster than the most visionary projector can adjust his schemes. Swift to the Lord High Treasurer.

2. To reduce to the true state or standard, to make accurate.

The names of mixed modes, for the most part, want standards in nature, whereby men may rectify and adjust their signification, therefore they are very various and doubtful. Locke.

3. To make conformable. It requires the particle to before the thing to which the conformity is made.

As to the accomplishment of this remarkable prophecy, whoever reads the account given by Josephus, without knowing his character, and compares it with what our Saviour foretold, would think the historian had been a christian, and that he had nothing else in view, but to adjust the event to the prediction.
Addison on the Christian Religion.

ADJU'STMENT. n. s. [ajustement, Fr.]

1. Regulation; the act of putting in method, settlement.

The farther and clearer adjustment of this affair, I am constrained to sojourn to the larger treatise. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

2. The state of being put in method, or regulated.

It is a vulgar idea we have of a watch or clock, when we conceive of it as an instrument made to shew the hour: but it is a learned idea which the watch-maker has of it, who knows all the several parts of it, together with the various connexions and adjustments of each part. Watts's Logick.

ADJUTANT. n. s. A petty officer, whose duty is to assist the major, by distributing the pay, and overseeing the punishment, of the common men.

To ADJUTE. v. a. [adjuvo, adjutum, Lat.] To help; to concur, a word not now in use.

For there be
Six bachelors as bold as he,
Adjuting to his company;
And each one hath his livery. Ben. Johnson's Under-woods.

ADJU'TOR. n. s. [adjutor, Lat.] A helper. Dict.

To ADJOVATE. v. a. [adjuvo, Lat.] To help; to further; to put forward. Dict.

ADMEASUREMENT. n. f. [See MEASURE.] The adjustment of proportions; the act or practice of measuring according to rule.

Admeasurement is a writ, which lieth for the bringing of those to a mediocrity, that usurp more than their part. It lieth in two cases: one is termed admeasurement of dower, where the widow of the deceased holdeth from the heir, or his guardian, more in the name of her dower, than belongeth to her. The other is admeasurement of pasture, which lieth between those that have common of pasture appendant to their freehold, or common by vicinage, in case any one of them, or more, do surcharge the common with more cattle than they ought. Cowell

In some counties they are not much more acquainted with admeasurement by acre; and thereby the writs of those counties contain twice or thrice so many acres more than the land hath. Bacon's Hist. Off. Ancient.

ADMEASURA'TION. n. f. [ad and mensura, Lat.] The act, or practice, of measuring out to each his part.

ADMI'NICLE. n. f. [adminiculum, Lat.] Help, support, furtherance. Dict.

ADMINI'CULAR. adj. [from adminiculum, Lat.] That which gives help. Dict.

To ADMINISTER. v. a. [administro, Lat.]

1. To give; to afford, to supply.

Let zephyrs board
Administer their tepid genial airs,
Naught fear he from the west, whose gentle warmth
Discloses well the earth's all-teeming womb. Phillips

2. To act as the minister or agent in any employment or office; generally, but not always, with some hint of subordination, to administer the government.

For forms of government let fools contest,
Whate'er is best administer'd, is best. Pope's Essay on Man.

3. To administer justice.

4. To administer the sacraments.

Have not they the old popish custom of administering the blessed sacrament of the holy eucharist with wafer-cakes? Hooker, b. iv. § 10.

5. To administer an oath.

Swear by the duty that you owe to heaven,
To keep the oath that we administer. Shakesp. Richard II.

6. To administer physick.

I was carried on men's shoulders, administering physick and phlebotomy. Wafer's Voyage.

7. To administer to, to contribute; to bring supplies.

I must not omit, that there is a fountain rising in the upper part of my garden, which forms a little wandering rill, and administers to the pleasure, as well as the plenty, of the place. Spectator, N° 477.

8. To perform the office of an administrator, in law. See ADMINISTRATION.

Neal's order was never performed, because the executors durst not administer. Arbuthnot and Pope's Martin Scribler.

To ADMI'NISTRATE. v. a. [administro, Lat.] To exhibit; to give as physick.

They have the same effects in medicine, when inwardly administrated to animal bodies. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

ADMINISTRA'TION. n. f. [administratio, Lat.]

1. The act of administering or conducting any employment, as, the conducting the publick affairs, dispensing the laws.

I then did use the person of your father,
The image of his pow'r lay then in me:
And in th' administration of his law,
While I was busy for the commonwealth,
Your highness pleased to forget my place. Shakesp. Henry IV.

In the first time of his administration, he shone so powerfully upon me, that, like the heat of a Russian summer, he ripened the fruits of poetry in a cold climate.
Dryden's Dedication of Virgil's Pastorals

2. The active or executive part of government.

It may pass for a maxim in state, that the administration cannot be placed in too few hands, nor the legislature in too many. Swift's Sentiments of a Church of England man.

3. Those to whom the care of publick affairs is committed.

4. Distribution, exhibition, dispensation.

There is, in sacraments, to be observed their force, and their form of administration. Hooker, b. v.

By the universal administration of grace, begun by our blessed Saviour, enlarged by his apostles, carried on by their immediate successors, and to be completed by the rest to the world's end; all types that darkened this faith are enlightened. Sprat's Sermons.

ADMI'NISTRATIVE. adj. [from administrate.] That which administers, that by which any one administers.

ADMINISTRA'TOR. n. f. [administrator, Lat.]

1. Is properly taken for him that has the goods of a man dying intestate, committed to his charge by the ordinary, and is accountable for the same, whenever it shall please the ordinary to call upon him thereunto. Cowell

He was wonderfully diligent to enquire and observe what became of the king of Arragon, in holding the kingdom of Castile, and whether he did hold it in his own right, or as administrator to his daughter.

2. He that officiates in divine rites.

I feel my conscience bound to remember the death of Christ, with some society of christians or other, since it is a most plain command; whether the person, who distributes those enemies, be only an occasional or a settled administrator.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind, p. i. c. 8.

3. He that conducts the government.

The residence of the prince, or chief administrator, of the civil power. Swift's short View of Ireland.

[illegible] letters in consequence of a will.

ADMINISTRA'TORSHIP. n. f. [from administrator.] The office of administrator.

ADMIRABLE. adj. [admirabilis, Lat.] To be admired; worthy of admiration; of power to excite wonder; always taken in a good sense, and applied either to persons or things.

The more power he hath to hurt, the more admirable is his praise, that he will not hurt. Sidney, b. ii.

God was with them in all their afflictions, and, at length, by working their admirable deliverance, did testify that they served him not in vain. Hooker, b. iv. § 2.

What admirable things occur in the remains of several other philosophers? Short, I confess, of the rules of christianity, but generally above the lives of christians. South's Sermons.

You can at most
To an indifferent lover's praise pretend:
But you would spoil an admirable friend. Dryd. Aurengz.

ADMIRABLENESS. n. f. [from admirable.] The quality of being admirable, the power of raising wonder.

ADMIRABILITY. n. f. [admirabilis, Lat.] The quality or state of being admirable. Dict.

ADMIRABLY. adv. [from admirable.] So as to raise wonder; in an admirable manner.

The theatre is, I think, the most spacious of any I ever saw, and, at the same time, so admirably well contrived, that, from the very depth of the stage, the lowest sound may be heard distinctly to the farthest part of the audience, as in a whispering place, and yet, if you raise your voice as high as you please, there is nothing like an echo to cause in it the least confusion. Addison on Italy.

ADMIRAL. n. f. [amiral, Fr. of uncertain etymology.]

1. An officer or magistrate that has the government of the king's navy, and the hearing and determining all causes, as well civil as criminal, belonging to the sea. Cowell.

2. The chief commander of a fleet.

He also, in battle at sea, overthrew Rodericus Rotundus, admiral of Spain, in which fight the admiral, with his son, were both slain, and seven of his galleys taken. Knolles's Hist. Turks.

Make the sea shine with gallantry, and all
The English youth flock to their admiral. Waller.

3. The ship which carries the admiral or commander of the fleet.

The admiral galley, wherein the emperor himself was, by great mischance struck upon a sand. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

ADMIRALSHIP. n. f. [from admiral.] The office or power of an admiral.

ADMIRA'LTY. n. f. [amirauté, Fr.] The power, or officers, appointed for the administration of naval affairs.

ADMIRA'TION. n. f. [admiratio, Lat.]

1. Wonder; the act of admiring or wondering.

Indued with human voice, and human sense
Reasoning to admiration. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

They are imitations of the passions, which always move, and therefore, consequently, please; for, without motion, there can be no delight which cannot be conferred but as an active passion. When we view those elevated ideas of nature, the result of that view is admiration, which is always the cause of pleasure. Dryd. Dufresnoy, Pref.

There is a pleasure in admiration, and this is that which properly causeth admiration, when we discover a great deal in an object, which we understand to be excellent; and yet we see, we know not how much more beyond that, which our understandings cannot fully reach and comprehend. Tillotson's Serm.

2. It is taken sometimes in a bad sense, though generally in a good.

[illegible]
What hope had you to gain a queen like me?
Because a hero forc'd me once away,
Am I thought fit to be a second prey? Dryd.

To ADMIRE. v. a. [admiro, Lat. admirer, Fr.]

1. To regard with wonder, generally in a good sense.

'Tis here that knowledge wonders, and there is an admiration that is not the daughter of ignorance. This indeed stupidly gazeth at the unwonted effect, but the philosophic passion truly admires and adores the supreme efficient. Granville

2. It is sometimes used, in more familiar speech, for to regard with love.

3. It is used, but rarely, in an ill sense.

You have displac'd the mirth, broke the good meeting
With most admir'd disorder [illegible]

To ADMIRE v. n. To wonder; ſometimes with the particle at

The eye is already ſo perfect, that I believe the reaſon of a man would eaſily have reſted here, and admir'd at his own contrivance. Ray on the Creation.

AN ADMI'RER. n. ſ. [from admire.]

1. The perſon that wonders, or regards with admiration.

Neither Virgil or Horace would have gained ſo great reputation, had they not been the friends and admirers of each other.

Who moſt to ſhun or hate mankind pretend,
Seek an admirer, or would fix a friend. Pope's Eſſay on Man.

2. In common ſpeech, a lover.

ADMI'RINGLY. adv. [from admire.] With admiration, in the manner of an admirer.

The king very lately ſpoke of him admiringly and mournfully. Shakeſp. All's well that ends well.

We may yet further admiringly obſerve, that though men uſually give freeſt where they have not given before, and make it an excuſe of their diſtance from g[illegible] have given it otherwiſe. Bo[illegible]

ADMISSIBLE. adj [admitto, admiſſum, Lat.] That which may be admitted.

Suppoſe that this ſuppoſition were admiſſible, yet this would not any way be inconſiſtent w[illegible] th[illegible] eternity of the divine na[illegible] Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ADMI'SSION. n. ſ. [admiſſio, Lat.]

1. The act or practice of admitting.

There was alſo enacted that charitable law, for the admiſſion of poor ſuitors without fee; whereby poor men became rather able to vex, than unable to ſue. Bacon's Henry VII.

By means of our ſolitary ſituation, and our rare admiſſion of ſtrangers, we know moſt part of the habitable world, and are ourſelves unknown. Bacon's New Atlantis.

2. The ſtate of be[illegible] admitted.

[illegible] your ill deſigns purſue,
[illegible] ſſion ſhow'd his fear of you. Dryd. Aurengzebe.

God could then exerciſe man's hopes with the expectations of a better paradiſe, or a more intimate admiſſion to himſelf. South's Sermons.

3. Admittance, the power of entering, or being admitted.

All ſprings have ſome degree of heat, none ever freezing, no not in the longeſt and ſevereſt froſts, eſpecially thoſe, where there is ſuch a ſituation and diſpoſition of the ſtrata as gives free and eaſy admiſſion to this heat. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

Our king deſcends from Jove:
And hither are we come, by his command,
To crave admiſſion in your happy land. Dryd. Æneid vii.

[illegible]

It is, when the patron preſents a clerk to a church that is vacant, and the biſhop, upon examination, admits and allows of ſuch clerk to be fitly qualified, by ſaying, Admitto te habilem, &c. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. The allowance of an argument, the grant of a poſition not fully proved.

To ADMI'T. v. a. [admitto, Lat.]

1. To ſuffer to enter; to grant entrance.

Does not one table Ba[illegible]us ſhall admi[illegible]

2. To ſuffer to enter upon an office; in which ſenſe, the phraſe of admiſſion into a college, &c. is uſed.

The treaſurer found it no hard matter ſo far to terr[illegible] that, for the king's ſervice, as was pretended, he admitted, for [illegible] clark, a perſon recommended by him. Clarendon.

To allow an argument or poſition.

Suppoſe no weapon can thy valour's pride
Subdue, that on no force it ſhould be won,
Admit no ſteel can hurt or wound thy ſide,
And be it heav'n hath thee ſuch favour done. Fairfax, b. i.

This argument is like to have the leſs effect on me, ſeeing I cannot eaſily admit the inference. Locke.

4. To allow, or grant in general; ſometimes with the particle of.

[illegible] you once admit of a latitude, that thoughts may be elevated, and images raiſed above the life, that leads you inſenſibly from your own principles to mine. Dryd. on Heroic Poetry.

ADMI'TTABLE. adj [from admit.] That perſon or thing which may be admitted.

The clerk, who is preſented, ought to prove to the biſhop, that he is a deacon, and that he has orders, otherwiſe, the biſhop is not bound to admit him: for, as the law then ſtood, a deacon was admittable. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

ADMI'TTANCE. n. ſ. [from admit.]

1. The act of admitting; allowance or permiſſion to enter.

It cannot enter any man's conceit to think it la[illegible] every man which liſteth ſhould take upon him charge [illegible] church, and therefore all ſober men admittance is of ſuch neceſſity, that, without it, there can be no church-policy. Hooker, b. v.

As to the admittance of the weighty groſſer parts of the air into the blood, through the coats of the veſſels, it ſeems contrary to experiments upon dead bodies. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The power or right of entering.

What
If I do one one of their hands?—'tis gold
Which buys admittance. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

Surely a daily expectation at the gate, is the readieſt way to gain admittance into the houſe. South's Ser[illegible]

There's news from Bertran, he deſires
Admittance to the king, and cries aloud,
This day ſhall end our fears. Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

There are ſome ideas which have admittance only through one ſenſe, which is peculiarly adapted to receive them. Locke.

3. Cuſtom, or prerogative, of being admitted to great perſons; a ſenſe now out of uſe.

Now, Sir John, here is the heart of my purpoſe: you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, of great admittance, authentick in your place and perſon, generally allowed for your many warlike, courtlike, and learned preparations.
Shakeſpeare's Merry Wives of Windſor.

4. Conceſſion of a poſition.

Nor could the Pythagorean give eaſy admittance thereto, for, holding that ſeparate ſouls ſucceſſively ſupplied other bodies, they could hardly allow the raiſing of ſouls from other worlds. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b.

To ADMI'X. v. a. [admiſceo, Lat.] To mingle with ſome thing elſe.

ADMI'XTION. n. ſ. [from admix.] The union of one body with another, by mingling them.

All metals may be calcined by ſtrong waters, or by admixtion of ſalt, ſulphur, and mercury. Bacon's Phyſical Remains.

The elements are no where pure in theſe lower regions; and if there is any free from the admixtion of another, ſure it is above the concave of the moon. Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica.

To ADMONISH. v. a. [admoneo, Lat.]

To warn of a fault; to reprove gently; to counſel againſt wrong practices; to put in mind of a fault or a duty; with the particle of, or againſt, which is more rare, or the infinitive mood of a verb.

One of his cardinals, who better knew the intrigues of affairs, admoniſhed him againſt that unlucky piece of ingenuity.
Davy of Piety.

He of their wicked ways
Shall them admoniſh, and before them ſet
The paths of righteouſneſs. Milt. Par. Loſt, b. xi.

But when he was admoniſhed by his ſubject to defend, he came down, gently circling in the air, and ſinging, to the ground. Dryden's Dedication of Virgil's Paſt.

ADMO'NISHER. n. ſ. [from admoniſh.] The perſon that admoniſhes, or puts another in mind of his faults or duty.

Horace was a mild admoniſher; a court-ſatyriſt fit for the gentle times of Auguſtus. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedicat.

ADMO'NISHMENT. n. ſ. [from admoniſh.] Admonition; the notice by which one is put in mind of faults or duties: a word not of uſe.

But yet be wary in the ſuit, my lord:
—Whoſe grave admoniſhment prevail with me.
Shakeſpeare's Henry V. p. i.

To th' infinitely Good we owe
Immortal thanks, and his admoniſhment
Receive, with ſolemn purpoſe to obſerve
Immutably his ſovereign will, the end
Of what we are. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. vii. l. 77.

ADMONITION. n. ſ. [admonitio, Lat.] The hint of a fault or counſel, gentle reproof.

They muſt give our teachers leave, for the ſaving of thoſe ſouls, to intermingle ſometimes, with other more neceſſary things, admonition concerning theſe not unneceſſary. Hooker.

From this admonition they took only occaſion to redouble their fault, and to ſleep again, ſo that, upon a ſecond and third admonition, they had nothing to plead for their unſeaſonable drowſineſs. South's Sermons.

ADMO'NITIONER. n. ſ. [from admonition.] A liberal diſpenſer admonition, a general adviſer. A ridiculous term.

Albeit the admonitioners did ſeem at firſt to like no preſcript form of prayer at all, but thought it the beſt that their miniſters ſhould always be left at liberty to pray, as his own diſcretion did ſerve, their defender, and his aſſociates, have ſithence propoſed to the world a form as themſelves did like. Hooker.

ADMONITORY. adj. [admonitorius, Lat.] That which admoniſhes.

The ſentence of reaſon is either mandatory, ſhewing what muſt be done, or elſe permiſſive, declaring only what may be done, or thirdly, admonitory, opening what is the moſt convenient for us to do. Hooker's Eccleſiaſtical Polity, b.

ADO'. n. f. [from the verb to do, with a before it, as the French affaire, from à and faire.]

1. Trouble, difficulty.

He took Clitophon prisoner, whom, with much ado, he keepeth alive; the Helots being extraordinarily cruel. Sidney, b. i.

They moved, and in the end perfuaded, with much ado, the people to bind themselves by solemn oath. Hooker, Pref.

He kept the borders and marches of the pale with much ado; he held many parliaments, wherein sundry laws were made. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

With much ado, he partly kept awake,
Not suffering all his eyes repose to take:
And ask'd the stranger, who did reeds invent,
And whence began so rare an instrument. Dryden.

2. Bustle, tumult; business; sometimes with the particle about.

Let's follow, to see the end of this ado.
Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

All this ado about Adam's fatherhood, and the greatness of its power, helps nothing to establish the power of those that govern.

It was a light and ludicrous sense, implying more tumult and shew of business, than the affair is worth; in this sense it is generally used.

I made no more ado, but took all their seven points in my target, thus. Shakesp. Henry IV.

We'll keep no great ado—a friend or two—
For, mark, Tybalt being slain so late,
It may be thought we held him carelessly,
Being our kinsman, if we revel much. Shakesp. Roman.

Come, come, says Puss, without any more ado, 't for me to go to breakfast, for cats don't love dialogues. L'Estrange, Fab.

ADOLESCENCE. n. f. [adolescentia, Lat.]

The age succeeding childhood, and succeeded by puberty; more largely, that part of life in which the body has not yet reached its full perfection. See ADOLESCENCY.

The sons must have a tedious time of childhood and adolescence, before they can either themselves assist their parents, or encourage them with new hopes of posterity. Bentley's Serm.

ADOLE'SCENCY. n. f. The same with adolescence.

He was so far from a boy, that he was a man born, and at his full stature, if we believe Josephus, who places him in the last adolescency, and makes him twenty-five years old.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 8.

To ADOPT. v. a. [adopto, Lat.]

1. To take a son by choice; to make him a son, who was not so by birth.

Were none of all my father's offers left;
Nay, were I of my mother's kin bereft,
None by an uncle's or a grandame's side,
Yet I could some adopted heir provide. Dryd. Pers. Sat. vi.

2. To place any person or thing in a nearer relation, than they have by nature, to something else.

Whether, adopted to some neighb'ring star,
Thou roll'st above us, in thy wand'ring race,
Or, in procession fix'd and regular,
Mov'd with the heav'nly majestic pace,
Or call'd to more celestial bliss,
Thou tread'st, with seraphims, the vast abyss. Milton.

We are seldom at ease from the fomentation of our natural or adopted desires, but a constant succession of uneasinesses, out of that stock, which natural wants, or acquired habits, have heaped up, take the will in their turns. Locke.

ADOPTEDLY. adv. [from adopted.] After the manner of something adopted.

Adoptedly, as school-maids change their names,
By vain, though apt, affection. Shakesp. Measure for M.

ADO'PTER. n. f. [from adopt.]

He that gives some one by choice the rights of a son.

ADO'PTION. n. f. [adoptio, Lat.]

1. The act of adopting, or taking to one's self what is not nat

See the heal of having a false woman! My bed shall be abused, my coffers ransacked, my reputation gnawn at, and I shall not only receive this villainous wrong, but shall undergo the adoption of abominable terms, and by him that does me this wrong. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

2. The state of being adopted.

In which time she purpos'd,
By watching, weeping, tendance, kissing, to
O'ercome you with her shew. yes, and in time
(When she had fitted you with her craft) to work
Her son into th' adoption of the crown. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

In every act of our christian worship, we are taught to call upon him under the endearing character of our Father, to remind us of our adoption, that we are made heirs of God, and joint heirs of Christ. Rogers's Sermons.

ADOPTIVE. adj. [adoptivus, Lat.]

1. He that is adopted by another, and made his son.

It is impossible an elective monarch should be so free and absolute as an hereditary; no more than it is possible for a father to have so full power and interest in an adoptive son, as in a natural. Baron's Considerations on a War with Spain.

2. He that adopts another, and makes him his son.

An adopted son cannot vote his adoptive father into court, without his leave. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

ADORABLE. adj. [adorable, Fr.] That which ought to be adored, that which is worthy of divine honours.

On these two, viz. the love of God, and our neighbour, hang both the law and the prophets, says the adorable Author of christianity, and the Apostle says, the end of the law is charity. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

ADO'RABLENESS. n. f. [from adorable.] The quality of being adorable, worthiness of divine honours.

ADO'RABLY. adv. [from adorable.] In a manner worthy of adoration.

ADORATION. n. f. [adoratio, Lat.]

1. The external homage paid to the Divinity, distinct from mental reverence.

Solemn and serviceable worship we name, for distinction sake, whatsoever belongeth to the church, or publick society, of God, by way of external adoration. Hooker, b. v. § 4.

It is possible to suppose, that those who believe a supreme excellent Being, may yet give him no external adoration at all. Stillingfleet's Defence of Discourses on Rom. Idolatry.

2. Homage paid to persons in high place or esteem.

O ceremony, shew me but thy worth:
What is thy toll, O adoration!
Art thou nought else but place, degree, and form,
Creating awe and fear in other men?
Wherein thou art less happy, being fear'd,
Than they in fearing
What drink'st thou oft, instead of homage sweet,
But poison'd flattery? Shakespeare's Henry V.

To ADORE. v. a. [adoro, Lat.]

1. To worship with external homage; to pay divine honours.

The mountain nymphs and Thetis they adore,
And from her oracles relief implore. Dryden.

2. It is used, popularly, to denote a high degree of reverence or regard, to reverence, to honour; to love.

The people appear adoring their prince, and their prince adoring God. Tatler, N° 57.

ADO'REMENT. n. f. [from adore.] Adoration, worship: a word scarcely used.

The priests of elder times deluded their apprehensions with sooth-sayings, and such obliquе idolatries, and won their credulities to the literal and downright adorement of cats, lizzards, and beetles. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 3.

ADORER. n. f. [from adore.]

He that adores, a worshipper: a term generally used in a low sense; as, by lovers, or admirers.

Being so far provoked as I was in France, I would abate her nothing, though I profess myself her adorer, not her friend. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Whilst as th' approaching pageant does appear,
And echoing crouds speak mighty Venus near,
I, her adorer, too devoutly stand
Fast on the utmost margin of the land. Prior.

2. A worshipper, in a serious sense.

He was so severe an adorer of truth, as not to dissemble; or to suffer any man to think that he would do any thing, which he resolved not to do. Clarendon.

To ADORN. v. a. [adorno, Lat.]

1. To dress, to deck the person with ornaments.

He hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels. Isaiah, xlv. 10.

Yet 'tis not to adorn and gild each part,
That shews more cost than art,
Jewels at nose and lips, but laid appear. Cowley.

2. To set out any place or thing with decorations.

A gallery adorned with the pictures or statues of the inventions of things useful to human life. Cowley.

3. To embellish with oratory or elegance of language.

Thus will supply men's tongues with many new things, to be named, adorned, and described, in their discourse. Sprat's History of the Royal Society.

Whose names some nobler poem shall adorn,
For, though unknown to me, they sure fought well. Dryd.

ADO'RNMENT. n. f. [from adorn.] Ornament, embellishment, elegance.

Which attribute was not given to the earth, where it was confused, nor to the heavens, before they had motion and adornment. Raleigh's History of the World.

She was the very garment of Posthumus in more respect than my noble and natural person, together with the adornment of my qualities. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

ADO'WN. adv. [from a and down.] Down, on the ground.

Thrice did she sink adown in deadly sound,
And thrice he her reviv'd with busy pain. Fairy Queen, b. i.

ADO'WN. prep. Down; towards the ground; from a higher situation towards a lower.

In this remembrance Emily ere day
Arose, and dress'd herself in rich array,
Fresh as the month, and as the morning fair,
Adown her shoulders fell her length of hair. Dryd. Fables.

ADRE'AD. adv. [from a and dread; as, aside, athirst, asleep.] In a state of fear, frighted; terrified. now obsolete.

And thinking to make all men adread to such a one an enemy, who would not spare, nor fear to kill so great a prince.
Sidney, b. ii.

ADRI'FT. adv. [from a and drift, from drive.] Floating at random; as, any impulse may drive.

Then, shall this mount
Of paradise, by might of waves, be mov'd
Out of his place, push'd by the horned flood;
With all his verdure spoil'd, and trees adrift
Down the great river, to the opening gulf,
And there take root. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 832.

It seem'd a corps adrift to distant sight,
But at a distance who could judge aright. Dryd. Fables.

The custom of frequent reflection will keep their minds from running adrift, and call their thoughts home from useless unattentive roving. Locke on Education, § 176.

ADROIT adj. [French.] Dextrous; active; skilful.

An adroit stout fellow would sometimes destroy a whole family, with justice apparently against him the whole time.
Jarvis's Introduct. to Don Quixote.

ADRO'ITNESS. n. f. [from adroit] Dexterity; readiness, activity. Neither this word, nor adroit, seem yet completely naturalized.

ADRY'. adv. [from a and dry.] Athirst, thirsty; in want of drink.

He never told any of them, that he was his humble servant, but his well-wisher, and would rather be thought a malecontent, than drink the king's health when he was not adry. Spect.

ADSCITITIOUS. adj. [adscitus, Lat.] That which is taken in to complete something else, though originally extrinsick; supplemental, additional.

ADSTRI'CTION. n. f. [adstrictio, Lat.] The act of binding together; and applied, generally, to medicaments and applications, which have the power of making the part contract.

To ADVANCE. v. a. [avancer, Fr.]

Now morn, her rosy steps in th' eastern clime
Advancing, sow'd the earth with orient pearl. Parad. Lost.

2. To raise to preferment; to aggrandize.

The declaration of the greatness of Mordecai, whereunto the king advanced him. Esther, x. 2.

3. To improve.

What laws can be advised more proper and effectual to advance the nature of man to its highest perfection, than these precepts of christianity? Tillotson.

4. To heighten, to grace, to give lustre to.

As the calling dignifies the man, so the man much more advances his calling. As a garment, though it warms the body, has a return with an advantage, being much more warmed by South's Sermons.

5. To forward, to accelerate.

These three last were slower than the ordinary Indian wheat of itself, and this culture did rather retard than advance. Bacon.

6. To propose, to offer to the publick.

I dare not advance my opinion against the judgment of so great an author; but I think it fair to leave the decision to the publick. Dryden's Fables, Pref.

Some ne'er advance a judgment of their own,
But catch the spreading notion of the town. Pop. Ess on Crit.

To ADVA'NCE. v. n.

1. To come forward.

At this the youth, whose ventrous soul
No fears of magick art controul,
Advanc'd in open sight. Parnel.

2. To make improvement.

They who would advance in knowledge, and not deceive and swell themselves with a little articulated air, should not take words for real entities in nature, till they can frame clear and distinct ideas of those entities. Locke.

ADVA'NCE. n. f. [from to advance.]

1. The act of coming forward.

All the foot were put into Abington, with a resolution to quit, or defend, the town, according to the manner of the enemy's advance towards it. Clarendon, b. viii.

So, like the sun's advance, your tides flow,
Which, as he rises, does the warmer grow. Waller.

2. A tendency to come forward to meet a lover; an act of invitation.

In vain are all the practis'd wiles,
In vain those eyes would love impart;
Not all th' advances, all the smiles,
Can move one jarcelenting heart. Wash.

Heaven us was below
The skill of ev'ry common beau,
Who, tho' he cannot spell, as wise
Enough to read a lady's eyes;
And will each accidental glance
Interpret for a kind advance. Swift's Miscell.

He has described the unworthy passion of the goddess Calypso, and the indecent advances she made to detain him from his own country. Pope's Odyssey, b. viii. notes.

3 [illegible], from one point to another

Our Saviour raised the ruler's daughter, the widow's son, and Lazarus; the first of these, when she had just expired; the second, as he was carried to the grave on his bier; and the third, after he had been some time buried. And having, by these gradual advances, manifested his divine power, he at last exerted the highest and most glorious degree of it, and raised himself also by his own all-quickening virtue, and according to his own express prediction. Atterbury's Sermons.

Men of study and thought, that reason right, and are lovers of truth, do make no great advances in their discoveries of it.
Locke of Human Understanding, § 3.

4. Improvement; progress towards perfection.

The principle and object of the greatest importance in the world to the good of mankind, and for the advance and perfecting of human nature. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ADVA'NCEMENT. n. f. [avancement, Fr.]

1. The act of coming forward.

This refinement having begun about the time of the revolution, I had some share in the honour of promoting it, and I observe, that it makes daily advancements, and, I hope, with me, will raise our language to the utmost perfection. Swift.

2. The state of being advanced, preferment.

During whose reign, the Percies of the North
Finding his usurpation most unjust,
Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne.
Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. i.

3. The act of advancing another.

In his own grace he doth exalt himself
More than in your advancement. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

4. Improvement.

Nor can we conceive it may be unwelcome unto those honoured worthies, who endeavour the advancement of learning.
Brown's Pref. to Vulgar Errours.

ADVA'NCER. n. f. [from advance]

He that advances any thing; a promoter; forwarder.

Soon after the death of a great officer, who was judged no advancer of the king's matters, the king said to his solicitor Bacon, who was his kinsman, How, tell me truly, what say you of your cousin that is gone? Bacon's Apothegms.

Let us add only this concerning this latter sort, that they are greater advancers of defamatory designs, than the very first contrivers. Government of the Tongue, § 5.

ADVANTAGE. n. f. [avantage, Fr.]

1. Superiority, often with of or over before a person.

In the practical prudence of managing such gifts, the laity may have some advantage over the clergy, whose experience is, and ought to be, less of this world than the others. Sprat

All other sorts and sects of men would evidently have the advantage of us, and a much surer title to happiness than we.
Atterbury's Preface to his Sermons.

2. Superiority gained by stratagem, or unlawful means.

The common law hath left them this benefit, whereof they make advantage, and wrest it to their bad purposes.
Spenser's State of Ireland.

But specially he took advantage of the night for such privy attempts, insomuch that the bruit of his manliness was spread every-where. Mort d'Arthur.

It is a noble and a sure defiance of a great malice, backed with a great interest, which yet can have no advantage of a man, but from his own expectations of something that is without him. South's Sermons.

As soon as he was got to Sicily, they sent for him back; designing to take advantage, and prosecute him in the absence of his friends. Swift on the Dissent in Athens and Rome.

3. Opportunity; convenience.

I beseech you,
If you think fit, or that it may be done,
Give me advantage of some brief discourse
With Desdemona alone. Shakespeare's Othello.

4. Favourable circumstances.

Like jewels to advantage set,
Her beauty by the shade does get. Waller.

A face, which is over-flushed, appears to advantage in the deepest scarlet, and the darkest complexion is not a little alleviated by a black hood. Addison. Spectator, N° 265

True wit is nature to advantage dress'd,
What oft was thought, but ne'er so well express'd.
Pope's Essay on Crit.

5. Gain, profit.

For thou saidst, what advantage will it be unto thee, and what profit shall I have, if I be cleansed from my sin? Job, xxxv.

Certain it is, that advantage now fits in the room of conscience, and steers all. South's Sermons

6. Overplus; something more than the mere lawful gain.

O my gentle Hubert,
We owe thee much; within this wall of flesh
There is a soul counts thee her creditor,
And with advantage means to pay thy love.
Shakespeare's King John.

You said, you neither lend nor borrow
Upon advantage. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

7. Preponderation on one side of the comparison.

Much more should the consideration of this pattern arm us with patience against ordinary calamities, especially if we consider his example with this advantage, that though his sufferings were wholly undeserved, and not for himself but for us, yet he bore them patiently. Tillotson.

[illegible]

1. To benefit.

Convey what I set down to my lady it shall advantage more than ever the bearing of letter did.
Shakespeare's Twelfth-Night.

The great business of the senses being to make us take notice of what hurts or advantages the body, it is wisely ordered by nature, that pain should accompany the reception of several ideas. Locke.

We should have pursued some other way, more effectual, for assisting the common enemy, and advantaging ourselves. Swift.

The trial hath endamag'd thee no way,
Rather more honour left, and more esteem,
Me naught advantag'd, missing what I aim'd. Par. Regained.

2. To promote; to bring forward, to gain ground.

To ennoble it with the spirit that inspires the Royal Society, were to advantage it in one of the best capacities in which it is improveable. Glanville's Scepsis Scientifica, Pref.

ADVANTAGED, adj. [from to advantage.]
Possessed of advantages.

In the most advantaged tempers, this disposition is but comparative, whereas the most of men labour under disadvantages, which nothing can rid them off. Glanv. Scepsis Scientifica.

ADVA'NTAGE-GROUND, n. s. Ground that gives superiority, and opportunities of annoyance or resistance.

This excellent man, who stood not upon the advantage-ground before, from the time of his promotion to the archbishoprick, or rather from that of his being commissioner of the treasury, exceedingly provoked, or underwent the envy, and reproach, and malice of men of all qualities and conditions; who agreed in nothing else. Clarendon.

ADVANTA'GEOUS. adj. [avantageux, Fr.]

1. Of advantage, profitable, useful; opportune; convenient.

The time of sickness, or affliction, is, like the cool of the day to Adam, a season of peculiar propriety for the voice of God to be heard, and may be improved into a very advantageous opportunity of begetting or increasing spiritual life in the soul.
Hammond's Fundamentals.

Here perhaps
Some advantageous act may be atchiev'd
By sudden onset, either with hell-fire
To waste his whole creation, or possess
All as our own. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i. l. 363.

2. It is used with relation to persons, and followed by to.

Since every painter paints himself in his own works, 'tis advantageous to him to know himself, to the end that he may cultivate those talents which make his genius. Dryd. Dufresnoy.

ADVANTA'GEOUSLY. adv. [from advantageous.]
Conveniently, opportunely, profitably.

It was advantageously situated, there being an easy passage from it to Ægypt, Æthiopia, Persia, and India, by sea. Arbuth.

ADVANTA'GEOUSNESS. n. s. [from advantageous.]
Quality of being advantageous; profitableness, usefulness, convenience.

The last property, which qualifies God for the fittest object of our love, is, the advantageousness of his to us, both in the present and the future life. Boyle's Seraphic Love.

To ADVENE. v. n. [advenio, Lat.]
To accede to something, to become part of something else, without being essential; to be superadded.

A sixth cause considered in judicature, is styled an accidental cause; and the accidental of any act, is said to be whatever advenes to the act itself already subsistuated. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ADVE'NIENT. adj. [advenient, Lat.]
Advening, coming from outward causes; superadded.

If to suppose the soul a distinct substance from the body, and extrinsecally advenient, be a great error in philosophy, almost all the world hath hitherto been mistaken.
Glanville's Vanity of Dogmatism.

Being thus divided from truth in themselves, they are yet farther removed by advenient deception; for they are daily mocked into error by hurtful devisers. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

ADVENT. n. s. [from adventus; that is, adventus Redemptoris.]
The name of one of the holy seasons, signifying the coming, that is, the coming of our Saviour; which is made the subject of our devotion during the four weeks before Christmas.

ADVENTINE. adj. [from advenio, adventum.]
Adventitious, that which is extrinsically added; that which comes from outward causes, a word scarcely in use.

As for the peregrine heat, it is thus far true, that, if the proportion of the adventine heat be greatly predominant to the natural heat and spirits of the body, it tendeth to dissolution or notable alteration. Bacon's Natural History, N° 836.

ADVENTI'TIOUS. adj. [adventitius, Lat.]
That which advenes; accidental, supervenient; extrinsically added, not essentially inherent.

Diseases of continuance get an adventitious strength from custom, besides their material cause from the humours. Bacon.

Though we may call the obvious colours natural, and the others adventitious, yet such changes of colours, from whatsoever cause they proceed, may be properly enough taken in, to illustrate the present subject. Boyle on Colours.

If his blood boil, and th' adventitious fire
Fir'd by high meats, and higher wines, require
To temper and allay the burning heat,
Waters are brought, which by decoction get
New coolness. Dryd. Juvenal, Sat. v.

Of this we have an instance in the gem-stone; where, of all the many sorts reckoned up by lapidaries, there are not above three or four that are original, their diversities, as to lustre, colour, and hardness, arising from the different admixture of other adventitious mineral matter. Woodward's Natural Hist.

ADVE'NTITIOUSNESS. n. s. [from adventitious.]
The thing or person that comes from without; a word not now in use.

That the natives be not so many, but that there may be elbow-room enough for them, and for the adventitiousness also.
Bacon's Advice to Sir George Villiers.

ADVE'NTUAL. adj. [from advent.]
Relating to the season of advent.

I do also daily use one other collect, as, namely, the collects adventual, quadragesimal, paschal, or pentecostal, for their proper seasons. Bishop Saunderson upon Submission to Usurpers.

ADVENTURE, n. s. [aventure, Fr.]

1. An accident; a chance, a hazard; an event of which we have no direction.

The general summoned three castles that were near one desperate of succour, and not desirous to dispute the defence, presently yielded, but two stood upon their adventure.
Sir John Hayward.

2. In this sense is used the phrase, at all adventures; [à l'aventure, Fr.] By chance; without any rational scheme.

Blows flew at all adventures, wounds and deaths given and taken unexpected, many scarce knowing their enemies from their friends. Sir John Hayward.

Where the mind does not perceive this probable connection, there men's opinions are the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures, without choice and without direction. Locke.

3. The occasion of casual events, an enterprise in which something must be left to hazard.

For I must love, and am resolv'd, to try
My fate, or, failing in th' adventure, die. Dryden's Fables.

This noun, with all its derivatives, are frequently written without d; as, venture, venturous.

To ADVE'NTURE. v. n. [adventurer, Fr.]

1. To try the chance, to dare.

Be not angry,
Most mighty princess, that I have adventur'd
To try your taking of a false report. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

The tender and delicate woman among you, which would not adventure to set the sole of her foot upon the ground, for delicateness and tenderness. Deuter. xxviii. 56.

2. In an active sense, to put into the power of chance.

For my father fought for you, and adventured his life for, and delivered you out of the hand of Midian. Judges, ix. 17.

3. It is often used with the reciprocal pronoun; as, he adventured himself.

ADVE'NTURER. n. s. [aventurier, Fr.]
He that seeks occasions of hazard, he that puts himself in the hands of chance.

He is a great adventurer, said he,
That hath his sword through hard assay forgone,
And now hath vow'd, till he avenged be
Of that despight, never to wear none. Fairy Queen, b. i.

The kings of England did not make the conquest of Ireland their own work; it was begun by particular adventurers, and other volunteries, who came to seek their fortunes in Ireland.
Sir John Davies on Ireland.

In this action, highly commendable, he intended to hazard his own action, that so the more easily he might draw other adventurers, who else were like to be less forward. Sir W. Raleigh's Hist.

Had it not been for the British, which the late wars drew over, and of adventurers or soldiers seated here, the country had, by the last war, and plague, been left, in a manner, destitute.
Temple's Miscellanies.

Their wealthy trade from pirate's rapine free,
Our merchants shall no more adventurers be. Dryden.

A D V

ADVENTUROUS. adj. [adventureux, Fr.]

1. He that is inclined to adventures; and, consequently, bold, daring, courageous.

At land and sea, in many a doubtful fight,
Was never known a more adventurous knight;
Who oftner drew his sword, and always for the right.
Dryd. Hind and Panther.

2. Applied to things, that which is full of hazard; which requires courage; dangerous.

But I've already troubled you too long,
Nor dare attempt a more adventurous song.
My humble verse demands a softer theme;
A painted meadow, or a purling stream.

ADVENTUROUSLY. adv. [from adventurous.]

After an adventurous manner; boldly; daringly.

They are both hanged, and so would this be, if he durst steal any thing adventurously. Shakespeare's Henry V.

ADVENTUROUSOME. adj. [from adventure.]

The same with adventurous: a low word, scarcely used in writing.

ADVENTUROUSOMENESS. n. s. [from adventurous.]

The quality of being adventurous. Dict.

ADVERB. n. s. [adverbium, Lat.]

A word joined to a verb or adjective, and solely applied to the use of qualifying and restraining the latitude of their signification, by the intimation of some circumstance thereof; as, of quality, manner, degree. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

Thus we say, he runs swiftly, the bird flies aloft, he lives virtuously.

ADVERBIAL. adj. [adverbialis, Lat.]

That which has the quality or structure of an adverb.

ADVERBIALLY. adv. [adverbialiter, Lat.]

Like an adverb, in the manner of an adverb.

I should think ella was joined adverbially with venit, did Virgil make use of so equivocal a syntax. Addis. Rem. on Italy.

ADVERSABLE. adj. [from adverse.]

Contrary to, opposite to. Dict.

ADVERSARIA. n. s. [Lat. A book, as it should seem, in which Debtor and Creditor were set in opposition.] A common-place, a book to note in.

These parchments are supposed to have been St Paul's adversaria. Bull's Sermons.

ADVERSARY. n. s. [adversaire, Fr. adversarius, Lat.]

An opponent, antagonist, enemy: generally applied to those that have verbal or judicial quarrels, as, controvertists or litigants: sometimes to an opponent in single combat. It may sometimes imply an open profession of enmity, as we say, a secret enemy is worse than an open adversary.

Yet am I noble, as the adversary
I come to cope. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Those rites and ceremonies of the church, therefore, which were the self-same now that they were, when holy and virtuous men maintained them against profane and deriding adversaries, her own children have in derision. Hooker, b. v. § 1.

Mean while th' adversary of God and man,
Satan, with thoughts inflam'd of highest design,
Puts on swift wings. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 620.

An adversary, on the contrary, makes a stricter search into us, and discovers every flaw and imperfection in our tempers. A friend exaggerates a man's virtues, an enemy inflames his crimes. Addison. Spectator, N° 399.

ADVERSATIVE. adj. [adversativus, Lat.]

A term of grammar, applied to a word which makes some opposition or variety; as in this sentence This diamond is great, but it is rough. But is an adversative conjunction.

ADVERSE. adj. [adversus, Lat.]

In prose it has now the accent on the first syllable; in verse it is accented on the first by Shakespeare, on either, indifferently, by Milton; on the last, by Dryden, on the first, by Rescommon.

Acting with contrary directions; as, two bodies in collision.

Was I for this nigh wrecked upon the sea,
And swallowed, by adverse winds, from England's bank
Drove back again unto my native clime. Shakesp. Henry VI.

As when two polar winds blowing adverse,
Upon the Cronian sea together drive
Mountains of ice. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 289.

With adverse blast up-turns them from the South,
Notus and Afer. Ibid. l. 70.

A cloud of smoke envelopes either host,
And all at once the combatants are lost,
Darkling they join adverse, and shock unseen,
Coursers with coursers justling, men with men. Dryd.

2. Figuratively, contrary to the wish or desire, thence, calamitous, afflictive, pernicious. It is opposed to prosperous.

What if he hath decreed that I shall first
Be try'd in humble state, and things adverse,
By tribulations, injuries, insults,
Contempts, and scorns, and snares, and violence. Par. Reg.

Some the prevailing malice of the great,
Unhappy men, or adverse fate,
Sunk deep into the gulfs of an afflicted state.

3. Personally opponent, the person that counteracts another, contests any thing.

Well she saw her father was grown her adverse party;
yet her fortune such, as she must favour her rivals.

ADVERSITY. n. s. [adversité, Fr.]

Adversity, that is, opposition to our wishes.

1. The cause of our sorrow, affliction, misfortune. In this sense it may have a plural.

Let me embrace these four adversities,
For wise men say, it is the wisest course. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

2. The state of unhappiness; misery.

Sweet are the uses of adversity,
Which like the toad, ugly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head. Shak. As you like it.

Concerning deliverance itself from all adversity, we use not to say men are in adversity, whensoever they feel any small hinderance of their welfare in this world, but when some notable affliction or cross, some great calamity or trouble, befalleth them. Hooker, b. v. § 48.

A remembrance of the good use he had made of prosperity, contributed to support his mind under the heavy weight of adversity, which then lay upon him. Atterbury's Sermons.

ADVERSLY. adv. [from adverse.]

In an adverse manner; oppositely; unfortunately.

What I think, I utter, and spend my malice in my breath. Meeting two such weasmen as you are, (I cannot call you Lycurguses) if the drink you give me touch my palate adversly, I make a crooked face at it. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

To ADVERT. v. n. [adverto, Lat.]

To attend to, to regard, to observe; with the particle to before the object of regard.

The mind of man being not capable at once to advert to more than one thing, a particular view and examination of such an innumerable number of vast bodies, will afford matter of admiration. Ray on the Creation.

Now to the universal whole advert,
The earth regard as of that whole a part;
In which wide frame more noble worlds abound,
Wants, ye glorious orbs, which hang around. Blackmore.

We sometimes say, To advert the mind to an object.

ADVERTENCE. n. s. [from advert.]

Attention to, regard to; consideration.

Christianity may make Archimedes his challenge; give it but where it may set its foot; allow but a sober advertence to its proposals, and it will move the whole world. Decay of Piety.

ADVERTENCY. n. s. [from advert.]

The same with advertence. Attention, regard, heedfulness.

Too much advertency is not your talent, or else you had fled from that text, as from a rock. Swift.

To ADVERTISE v. a. [avertir, Fr.]

It is now spoken with the accent upon the last syllable; but appears to have been anciently accented on the second.

1. To inform another, to give intelligence; with an accusative of the person informed.

The bishop did require a respite,
Wherein he might the king his lord advertise,
Whether our daughter were legitimate. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

As I by friends am well advertised,
Sir Edmund Courtney, and the haughty prelate,
Bishop of Exeter, his elder brother,
With many more confederates are in arms. Shakespeare's Richard III.

To inform; to give notice, with of before the subject of information.

The death of Selymus nothing suspected, Ferhates, understanding that Solyman expected more assured advertisement, sent unto the other Bassas, unto whom he declared the death of the emperor, of which they, by another messenger, advertising those letters with all their bands and Knolles's History of the Turks.

were to advert [illegible] the chief hero of the distresses of his subjects, occasioned by his absence, to crave his succour, and to relieve him to hasten his return. Dryd. Pref. Dufresn.

2. To give notice of any thing, by means of an advertisement in the publick prints, as, He advertised his lo

ADVERTISEMENT, or ADVE'RTISE n. s. [advertissement, Fr.]

1. Intelligence [illegible]

all men's office to speak patience
To those, that wring under the load of sorrow,
But no man's virtue nor sufficiency,
To be so moral, when he shall endure
The like himself: therefore give me no counsel,
My griefs are louder than advertisement.

men, as a cunning prince that useth spies,
If they return no news, doth nothing know;
But if they make advertisement of foes,
The prince's counsel all awry do go. Sir John Davies.

He had received advertisement, that the party, which was sent his relief from London, had received some brush in Somersetshire, which would much retard their march. Clarendon.

The drum and trumpet, by their several sounds, serve for many kinds of advertisements, in military affairs: the bells serve to proclaim a feare-fire, and, in some places, water-breaches, the departure of a man, woman, or child, time of divine service, the hour of the day, day of the month. Holder.

3. Notice of any thing published in a paper of intelligence.

ADVERTISER. n. s. [advertiseur, Fr.]

1. He that gives intelligence or information.

2. The paper in which advertisements are published.

ADVERTISING, or ADVERTISING. part. adj. [from advertise.] Active in giving intelligence; monitory: a word not now in use.

As I was then
Advertising, and holy to your business,
Not changing heart with habit, I am still Attorned at your service. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

To ADVE'SPERATE. v. n. [advesperare, Lat.] To draw towards evening. Dict.

ADVICE. n. s. [avis, advis, Fr. from advisa, low Latin.]

1. Counsel; instruction: except that instruction implies superiority, and advice may be given by equals or inferiors.

Break we our match up, and, by my advice,
Let us impart what we have seen to-night
Unto young Hamlet. Shakesp. Hamlet.

O troubled, weak and coward, as thou art!
Without thy poor advice, the lab'ring heart
To worse extremes with swifter steps would run,
Not sav'd by virtue, yet by vice undone. Prior.

2. Reflection; prudent consideration; as, he always acts with good advice.

What he hath won, that he hath fortified:
So hot a speed, with such advice dispos'd,
Such temperate order, in so fierce a course,
Doth want example. Shakesp. King John.

3. Consultation; deliberation; with the particle with.

Great princes, for the most part, taking advice with workmen, with no less cost, set their things together. Bacon's E.

4. Intelligence; as, the merchants received advice of their loss.

This sense is somewhat low, and chiefly commercial.

ADVICE-BOAT. n. s. A vessel employed to bring intelligence.

ADVISABLE. adj. [from advise.] Prudent; fit to be advised.

Some judge it advisable for a man to account with his heart every day, and thus, no doubt, is the best and surest course, for still the oftner, the better. South's Sermons.

It is not advisable to reward, where men have the tenderness not to punish. L'Estrange's Fables.

ADVISABLENESS. n. s. [from advisable.] The quality of being advisable, or fit; fitness, propriety.

To ADVISE. v. a. [aviser, Fr.]

1. To counsel, with the particle to before the thing advised.

If you do stir abroad, go arm'd. ——
——— Arm'd, brother ——
——— Brother, I advise you to the best. Shak. K. Lear.

I would advise all gentlemen to learn merchants accounts, and not to think it a skill that belongs not to them. Locke.

When I consider the scruples and cautions I here lay in your way, methinks it looks as if I advised you to something which I would have offered at, but in effect not done. Idem.

2. To give information; to inform; to make acquainted with any thing; often with the particle of before the thing told.

You were advis'd, his flesh was capable
Of wounds and scars, and that his forward spirit
Would lift him, where most trade of danger rang'd.
Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. 1.

Such discourse [illegible]
As may advise him of his happy state,
Happiness in his power, left free to will. Paradise Lost.

A posting messenger dispatch'd from hence,
Of this fair troop advis'd their aged prince. Dryden's Æneid.

To ADVISE. v. n.

1. To consult, with the particle with before the person consulted, as, he advised with his companions.

2. To consider; to deliberate.

Advise if this be worth
Attempting, or to sit in darkness here,
Hatching vain empires. Milton, Paradise Lost, b. ii.

ADVISED. participial adj. [from advise.]

1. Acting with deliberation and design, prudent, wise.

Let his travel appear rather in his discourse, than in his apparel [illegible]; and, in his discourse, let him be rather advised in his answer, than forward to tell stories. Bacon's Ess.

In th' Almighty Father, where he sits
Shrin'd in his sanctuary of heav'n secure,
Consulting on the sum of things foreseen,
This tumult, and permitted all, advis'd. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

2. Performed with deliberation, done on purpose; acted with design.

By that which we work naturally, as, when we breathe, sleep, and move, we set forth the glory of God, as natural agents do; albeit we have no express purpose to make that our end, nor any advised determination therein to follow a law. Hooker, B. I.

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight,
The self-same way, with more advised watch,
To find the other forth; by venturing both,
I oft found both. Shakesp. Merchant of V.

ADVISEDLY. adv. [from advised.] Deliberately, purposely; by design; prudently.

Surprize may be made by moving things, when the party is in haste, and cannot stay to consider advisedly of that which is moved. Bacon, Essay XXII.

Thou shalt leave second thoughts (which are by all allowed the best) a relapse; and talkest of a quagmire, where no man ever stuck fast, and accusest constancy of mischief in what is natural, and advisedly undertaken. Sir John Suckling.

ADVISEDNESS. n. s. [from advised.] Deliberation, cool and prudent procedure.

While things are in agitation, private men may modestly tender their thoughts to the consideration of those that are in authority; to whose care it belongeth, in prescribing concerning indifferent things, to proceed with all fit advisedness and moderation. Saunderson's Judgment in one View.

ADVISEMENT. n. s. [advisement, Fr.]

1. Counsel, information.

Mote I wote,
What strange adventure do ye now pursue?
Perhaps my succour, or advisement meet,
Mote stead you much your purpose to subdue. Fairy Qu.

I will, according to your advisement, declare the evils, which seem most hurtful. Spenser's State of Ireland.

2. It is taken likewise, in old writers, for prudence and circumspection. It is now, in both senses, antiquated.

ADVISER. n. s. [from advise.] The person that advises, or gives counsel, a counsellor.

Here, free from court-compliances, he walks,
And with himself, his best adviser, talks. Waller.

They never fail of their most artful and indefatigable address, to silence this impertinent adviser, whose severity awes their excesses. Rogers's Sermons.

ADULA'TION. n. s. [adulation, Fr. adulatio, Lat.] Flattery; high compliment.

O be sick, great Greatness!
And bid thy ceremony give thee cure.
Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out,
With titles blown from adulation? Shakesp. Henry V.

They who flattered him most before, mentioned him now with the greatest bitterness, and called him now the corrupter of the king, and betrayer of the people; without imputing the least crime to him, committed since the time of that exalted adulation, or that was not then as much known to them, as it could be now. Clarendon.

ADULATOR. n. s. [adulator, Lat.] A flatterer. Dict.

ADULATORY. adj. [adulatorius, Lat.] Flattering, full of compliments.

ADULT. adj. [adultus, Lat.] Grown up; past the age of infancy and weakness.

They would appear less able to approve themselves, not only to the confessor, but even to the catechist, in their adult age, than they were in their minority, as having scarce ever thought of the principles of their religion, since they owned them to avoid correction. Decay of Piety.

The earth, by these applauded schools, 'tis said,
This single crop of men and women bred,
Who grown adult, (so chance, it seems, enjoin'd)
Did, male and female, propagate their kind. Blackmore.

ADULT. n. s. A person above the age of infancy, or grown to some degree of strength, sometimes full grown: a word used [illegible]

[illegible] expression of the cranium, without a fracture, can but seldom occur; and then it happens to children, whose bones are more pliable and soft than those of adults. Sharp's Surgery.

ADULTNESS. n. s. [from adult.] The state of being adult. See ADOLESCENCE. Dict.

To ADULTER. v. a. [adulterer, Fr. adultero, Lat.] To commit adultery with another: a word not classical.

To ADULTERATE. v. a. [adulterer, Fr. adultero, Lat.]

1. To commit adultery.

But fortune, oh!
Adulterates hourly with thine uncle John,
And with her golden hand hath pluckt on France.
Shakesp. King John.

2. To corrupt by some foreign admixture; to contaminate.

Common pot-ashes, bought of them that sell it in shops, who are not so foolishly knavish, as to adulterate them with saltpetre, which is much dearer than pot-ashes. Boyle.

Could a man be composed to such an advantage of constitution, tion, that it ſhould not at all adulterate the images of his mind; yet this ſecond nature would alter the craſis of his underſtanding. Glanville's Sceplis Scientifica, c. xvi.

The preſent war has ſo adulterated our tongue with ſtrange words, that it would be impoſſible for one of our great grandfathers to know what his poſterity have been doing. Spectator.

ADU'LTERATE. adj. [from To adulterate.]

1. Tainted with the guilt of adultery.

I am poſſeſs'd with an adulterate blot;
My [illegible] with the grime of luſt,
Being ſtrumpeted by thy contagion. Shakeſp. Comedy of Err.
— That inceſtuous, that adulterate beaſt. Idem, Hamlet.

2. Corrupted with ſome foreign mixture.

It does indeed differ no more, than the maker of adulterate wares does from the vender of them. Govern. of the Tongue.

They will have all their gold and ſilver, and may keep their adulterate copper at home; for we are determined not to purchaſe it with our manufactures. Swift's Miſcellanies.

ADU'LTERATENESS. n. ſ. [from adulterate.] The quality or ſtate of being adulterate, or counterfeit.

ADULTERA'TION. n. ſ. [from adulterate.]

1. The act of adulterating or corrupting by foreign mixture; contamination.

To make the compound paſs for the rich metal ſimple, is an adulteration, or counterfeiting: but if it be done avowedly, and without diſguiſing, it may be a great ſaving of the richer metals. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 798.

2. The ſtate of being adulterated, or contaminated.

Such tranſlations are like the adulteration of the nobleſt wines, where ſomething of the colour, ſpirit, and flavour, will remain; and, while they pleaſe ſome inferior palates, do only raiſe the indignation of every good taſte. Felton on the Cl[illegible]

ADU'LTERER. n. ſ. [adulter, Lat.] The perſon guilty of adultery.

With what impatience muſt the muſe behold,
The wife by her procuring huſband ſold;
For tho' the law makes null th' adulterer's deed
Of lands to her, the cuckold may ſucceed. Dryd. Juvenal.

ADU'LTERESS. n. ſ. [from adulterer.] A woman that commits adultery.

The Spartan lady replied, when ſhe was aſked, What was the puniſhment for adultereſſes? There are no ſuch things here. Government of the Tongue, § 3.

A robe of tiſſue, ſtiff with golden wire,
An upper veſt, once Helen's rich attire;
From Argos by the fam'd adultereſs brought;
With golden flow'rs and winding foliage wrought. Dryd. Vir.

ADU'LTEROUS. adj. [adulter, Lat.] Guilty of adultery.

Th' adulterous Antony, moſt large
In his abominations, turns you off,
And gives his potent regiment to a trull,
That noiſes it againſt us. Shakeſp. Antony and Cleopatra.

An adulterous perſon is tied to reſtitution of the injury, ſo far as it is reparable, and to make proviſion for the children, that they may not injure the legitimate. Taylor.

Think on whoſe faith th' adulterous youth relyd
Who promiſ'd, who procur'd the Spartan bride? Dryd. Æn.

ADULTERY. n. ſ. [adulterium, Lat.] The act of violating the bed of a married perſon.

All thy domeſtic griefs at home be left,
The wife's adultery, with the ſervant's theft,
And (the moſt racking thought, which can intrude)
Forget falſe friends, and their ingratitude. Dryd. Juven.

ADU'MBRANT. adj. [from adumbrate.] That which gives a faint reſemblance.

ADU'MBRATE. v. a. [adumbro, Lat.]

To ſhadow out, to give a ſlight likeneſs; to exhibit a faint reſemblance, like that which ſhadows afford of the bodies which they repreſent.

Heaven is deſigned for our reward, as well as reſcue; and therefore is adumbrated by all thoſe poſitive excellencies, which can endear or recommend. Decay of Piety

ADUMBRA'TION. n. ſ. [from adumbrate.]

1. The act of adumbrating, or giving a ſlight and imperfect repreſentation. See ADUMBRATE.

To make ſome adumbration of that we mean, the interiour is rather an impulſion or contuſion of the air, than an eliſion or ſection of the ſame. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt. N° 180.

2. The ſlight and imperfect repreſentation of a thing, a faint reſemblance.

The obſervers view but the backſide of the hangings; the right one is on the other ſide the grave: and our knowledge is [illegible] like thoſe broken ones; at beſt a moſt confuſed adumbra-
[illegible]

Thoſe of the firſt ſort have ſome adumbration of the rational nature, as vegetables have of the ſenſible. Hale's O[illegible]

A[illegible]NATION. n. ſ. [from an and unus, Lat.] The ſtate of be[illegible]ion: a word of little uſe.

When, by [illegible]n, wood, ſtraw, duſt, and water, are ſuppoſed to be united [illegible] one lump, the cold does not cauſe real congelation or adunation, but only hardening the aqueous parts of the liquor into ice; the other bodies, being accidentally preſent in that liquor, are frozen up in it, but not really united. Boyle.

ADU'NCITY. n. ſ. [aduncitas, Lat.] Crookedneſs; flexure inwards, hookedneſs.

There can be no queſtion, but the aduncity of the pounces, and beaks of the hawks, is the cauſe of the great and habitual immorality of thoſe animals. Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

ADU'NQUE. adj. [aduncus, Lat.] Crooked; bending inwards, hooked.

The birds that are ſpeakers, are parrots, pies, jays, daws, and ravens; of which parrots have an adunque bill, but the reſt not. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt N° 238.

A'DVOCACY. n. ſ. [from advocate.] The act of pleading, vindication; defence; apology: a word in little uſe.

If any there are who are of opinion, that there are no antipodes, or that the ſtars do fall, they ſhall not want herein the applauſe or advocacy of Satan. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i.

A'DVOCATE. n. ſ. [advocatus, Lat.]

1. He that pleads the cauſe of another in a court of judicature.

An advocate, in the general import of the word, is that perſon who has the pleading and management of a judicial cauſe. In a ſtrict way of ſpeaking, only that perſon is ſtiled advocate, who is the patron of the cauſe, and is often, in Latin, termed togatus, and, in Engliſh, a perſon of the long robe. Ayl. Par.

Learn what thou ow'ſt thy country and thy friend;
What's requiſite to ſpare, and what to ſpend.
Learn this, and, after, envy not the ſtore
Of the greas'd advocate that grinds the poor Dryd. Perſius.

2. He that pleads any cauſe, in whatever manner, as a controvertiſt or vindicator.

If ſhe dares truſt me with her little babe,
I'll ſhew't the king, and undertake to be
Her advocate to th' loudeſt. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

Of the ſeveral forms of government that have been, or are, in the world, that cauſe ſeems commonly the better, that has the better advocate, or is advantaged by fruther experience. Temple's Miſcellanies.

3. It is uſed with the particle for before the perſon or thing, in whoſe favour the plea is offered.

Foes to all living worth except your own,
And advocates for folly dead and gone. Pope's Epiſtles.

4. In the ſcriptural and ſacred ſenſe, it ſtands for one of the offices of our Redeemer.

Me his advocate,
And propitiation; all his works on me,
Good, or not good, ingraft. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

ADVOCA'TION. n. ſ. [from advocate.] The office of pleading, plea, apology.

A[illegible] thrice gentle Caſſio,
My advocation is not now in tune;
My lord is not my lord, nor ſhould I know him,
Were he in favour, as in humour, alter'd. Shakeſp. Othello.

ADVOLA'TION. n. ſ. [advolo, advolatum, Lat.] The act of flying to ſomething. Dict.

ADVOLU'TION. n. ſ. [advolutio, Lat.] The act of rolling to ſomething.

ADVO'UTRY. n. ſ. [avoutre, Fr.] Adultery.

He was the moſt perfidious man upon the earth, and he had made a marriage compounded between an advoutry and a rape. Bacon's Henry VII.

ADVOWE'. n. ſ. He that has the right of advowſon. See ADVOWSON.

ADVO'WSON, or ADVO'WZEN. n. ſ. [In common law.]

A right to preſent to a benefice, and ſignifies as much as Jus Patronatûs. In the canon law, it is ſo termed, becauſe they that originally obtained the right of preſenting to any church, were great benefactors thereto; and are therefore termed ſometimes Patroni, ſometimes Advocati. Cowell.

To ADU'RE. v. n. [adura, Lat.] To burn up.

Such a degree of heat, which doth neither melt nor ſcorch, doth mellow, and not adure. Bacon's Nat Hiſt. N° 319.

ADU'ST. adj. [aduſtus, Lat.]

1. Burnt up; but as with fire, ſcorched.

By this means, the virtual heat of the water will enter; and ſuch a heat as will not make the body aduſt, or fragile. Bacon.

Which with torrid heat,
And vapours as the Libyan air aduſt,
Began to parch that temperate clime. Milton's Par. Loſt

2. It is generally now applied, in a medicinal or philoſophical ſenſe, to the complexion and humours of the body.

Such humours are aduſt, as, by long heat, become of a hot and fiery nature, as choler, and the like. Quincy.

To eaſe the ſoul of one oppreſſive weight,
This quits an empire, that embroils a ſtate.
The ſame aduſt complexion has impell'd
Charles to the convent, Philip to the field Pope.

ADU'STED. adj. [See ADUST.]

1. Burnt, ſcorched, dried with fire.

Sulphurous and nitrous foam
They found, they mingled, and with ſubtle art,
Concocted, and aduſted, they reduc'd
To blackeſt grain, and into flore con[illegible] Paradiſe Loſt

2. Hot,

2. Hot, as the complexion

In regard they are but the fruits of adusted choler, and the evaporations of a vindicative spirit, He needs not much care for them; besides, she must give lovers leave to speak. Howell.

ADU'STIBLE. adj. [from adust] That which may be adusted, or burnt up. Dict.

ADU'STION. n. f. [from adust] The act of burning up, or drying, as by fire.

This is ordinarily a consequent of a burning colliquative fever; the softer parts being melted away, the heat continuing its adustion, upon the drier and fleshy parts, changes into a marcid fever. Harvey on Consumptions.

ADZ. n. f. See ADDICE.

AE, or Æ. A diphthong of very frequent use in the Latin language, which seems not properly to have any place in the English; since the æ of the Saxons has been long out of use, being changed to e simple, to which, in words frequently occurring, the æ of the Romans is, in the same manner, altered, as in equator, equinoctial, and even in Eneas.

ÆGLOGUE. n. f. [written instead of eclogue, from a mistaken etymology] A pastoral; a dialogue in verse between goatherds.

Which moved him rather in æglogues otherwise to write, doubting, perhaps, his ability, which he little needed, or minding to furnish our tongue with this kind wherein it faulteth. Spenser's Pastorals.

ÆGILOPS. n. f. [αἰγίλωψ, Gr. signifying goat-eyed, the goat being subject to this ailment.]

A tumour or swelling in the great corner of the eye, by the root of the nose, either with or without an inflammation: also a plant so called, for its supposed virtues against such a distemper. Quincy.

Ægilops is a tubercle in the inner canthus of the eye. Wiseman's Surgery.

ÆGYPTI'ACUM. n. f. An ointment consisting only of honey, verdigrease and vinegar. Quincy.

ÆL, or EAL, or AL.

In compound names, as καὶ in the Greek compounds, signifies all, or altogether. So Ælwin is a compleat conquerer. Albert, all illustrious: Aldred, altogether reverend. Alfred, altogether peaceful. To these Pammachius, Pancratius, Pamphilius, &c. do in some measure answer. Gibson's Camden.

ÆLF, (which, according to various dialects, is pronounced elf, welph, hulph, hilp, brife, and, at this day, help,) implies assistance. So Ælfwin is illustrious, and Ælfwold, an auxiliary governour; Ælfgifa, a lender of assistance: with which Baetus, Symmachus, Epicurus, &c. bear a plain analogy. Gibson's Camden.

ÆNIGMA. See ENIGMA.

AE'RIAL. adj. [aerius, Lat.]

1. Belonging to the air, as consisting of it.

The thunder, when to roll
With terrour through the dark aerial hall. Paradise Lost.

From all that can with fins or feathers fly,
Thro' the aerial or the watry sky. Prior.

I gathered the thickness of the air, or aerial interval, of the grasses at that ring. Newton's Opticks.

Vegetables abound more with aerial particles, than animal substances. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Produced by the air

The gifts of heav'n my foll'wing song pursues,
Aerial honey, and ambrosial dews. Dryd. Virg. Georg.

3. Inhabiting the air

Where those immortal shapes
Of bright aerial spirits live inspher'd,
In regions mild, of calm and serene air. Paradise Regained.

Aerial animals may be subdivided into birds and flies. Locke.

4. Placed in the air

Here subterranean works and cities see,
There towns aerial on the waving tree. Pope's Essay on Man.

5. High; elevated in situation, and therefore in the air.

A spacious city stood, with strongest walls,
Sure mounded, and with numerous turrets crown'd,
Aerial spires, and citadels, the seat
Of kings and heroes resolute in war. Philips.

AERIE. n. f. [aire, Fr.]

The proper word in hawks and other birds of prey for that which we generally call a nest in other birds. Cowell.

AEROLOGY. n. f. [ἀὴρ and λόγος, Gr.] The doctrine of the air.

AEROSCOPY. n. f. [ἀὴρ and σκοπέω, Gr.] The observation of the air. Dict.

ÆTHIOPS-MINERAL. n. f.

A medicine so called, from its dark colour, prepared of quicksilver and sulphur, ground together in a marble mortar to a black powder. Such as have used it most, think its virtues not very great. Quincy.

AETITES. n. f. [ἀετός, an eagle.] Eagle-stone. It is about the bigness of a walnut, and hollow, with somewhat in it that rattles upon shaking.

AFA'R. adv. [from a for at, and far] See FAR.

1. At a great distance.

So shaken as we are, so wan with care,
Find we a time for frighted peace to pant,
And breathe short-winded accents of new broils,
To be commenc'd in strouds afar remote? Shakespeare's Hen. IV.

We hear better when we hold our breath than contrary; insomuch as in listening to attain a sound afar off, men hold their breath. Bacon's Natural History, N° 284.

2. To a great distance.

Hector hastened to relieve his boy;
Dismiss'd his burnish'd helm that shone afar,
The pride of warriours, and the pomp of war. Dryd.

3. From afar; from a distant place.

The rough Vulturnus, furious in its course,
With rapid streams divides the fruitful grounds,
And from afar in hollow murmur sounds. Addison on Italy.

4. Afar off; remotely distant.

Much suspecting his secret ends, he entertained a treaty of peace with France, but secretly and afar off, and to be governed as occasions should vary. Sir John Hayward.

AFE'ARD. participial adj. [from to fear, for to fright, with a redundant.]

1. Frighted; terrified; afraid.

He loudly bray'd, that like was never heard,
And from his wide devouring oven sent
A flake of fire, that flashing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd, and almost made afeard. Fairy Queen.

But tell me, Hal, art thou not horribly afeard? Thou being heir apparent, could the world pick thee out three such enemies again, as Douglas, Percy, and Glendower. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Till he cherish'd too much beard,
And make Love, or me afeard. Ben. Johnson's Underwoods.

2. It has the particle of before the object of fear

The quality of being affable; easiness of manners; courteousness; civility; condescension. It is commonly used of superiours.

Hearing of her beauty and her wit,
Her affability and bashful modesty,
Her wondrous qualities, and mild behaviour. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

He was of a most flowing courtesy and affability to all men, and so desirous to oblige them, that he did not enough consider the value of the obligation, or the merit of the person. Clarend.

All instances of charity, sweetness of conversation, affability, admonition, all significations of tenderness, care and watchfulness, must be expressed towards children. Taylor.

It is impossible for a publick minister to be so open and easy to all as old friends, as he was in his private condition; but this may be helped out by an affability of address. L'Estrange.

AFFABLE. adj. [affabilis, Lat.]

1. Easy of manners, accostable; courteous; complaisant. It is used of superiours.

He was affable, and both well and fair spoken, and would use strange sweetness and blandishment of words, where he desired to affect or persuade any thing that he took to heart. Bacon.

Her father is Baptista Minola,
An affable and courteous gentleman. Shakesp. Tam. Shrew.

Gentle to me, and affable hath been
Thy condescension, and shall be honour'd ever
With grateful memory. Milton's Paradise Lost, b.

2. It is applied to the external appearance; benign; mild; favourable

AFFORE'STATION. n. ſ. [from afforeſt.]

The charter de Foreſta was to reform the encroachments made in the time of Richard I. and Henry II. who had made new afforeſtations, and much extended the rigour of the foreſt laws. Hale's Common Law of England.

To AFFRA'NCHISE v. a. [affranchir, Fr.] To make free.

[illegible] der ves from ſ ayer, perhaps it comes from frigus.]

[illegible] ght, to terrify; to ſtrike with fear. This word is not now in [illegible]

The ſame to w ght he never won't ceſ ſe,
But when as monſters huge he would diſmay,
Or daunt unequal armies of his foes,
Or when the flying heavens he would affray. Fairy Queen.

AFFRA'Y, or AFFRA'YMENT. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

A tumultuous aſſault of one or more perſons upon others; a law term. A battle in this ſenſe is written fray.

AFFRICTION. n. ſ. [affrictus, Lat.] The act of rubbing one thing upon another.

I have ſeveral times obſerved, in wearing ſilver-hilted ſwords, that, if they rubbed upon my cloaths, if they were of a light-coloured cloth, the affriction would quickly blacken them, and, conſequently hereunto, I have found pens blacked almoſt all over, when I had a while carried them about me in a ſilver [illegible] caſe. L

To AFFRIGHT v. a. ["to FRIGHT."]

1. [illegible] with fear; to terrify; it generally implies a ſudden

[illegible] thy name affrighted me, in whoſe ſound is death. Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.

[illegible] ſeeing ſo bright
Could ſcarce north [illegible] e of death affright
[illegible], when his coun[illegible] (threatned with alarm)
Requires its courage and his conquering Arm,
Shall, more than once, the Punic bands affright. Dryd. Æn.

2. It is uſed in the paſſive, ſometimes with at before the thing

Thou ſhalt not be affrighted at them: for the Lord thy God [illegible] among you. Deut. vii. 21.

3. ometimes with the particle with before the thing feared.

As one affright
With hellish fiends, or furies mad uproar,
He then aroſe. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 5.

AFFRIGHT. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. Terrour, fear. This word is chiefly poetical.

As the moon, clothed with cloudy night,
Does ſhew to her, that walks in fear and ſad affright. F. Q.
Wide was his pariſh, not contracted cloſe
In ſtreets, but here and there a ſtraggling houſe,
Yet ſtill he was at hand, without requeſt
To ſerve the ſick, to ſuccour the diſtreſs'd
Tempting, on foot, alone, without affright,
The dangers of a dark tempeſtuous night. Dryd. Fab.

2. The cauſe of fear, a terrible object.

I ſee the gods
Upbraid our ſufferings, and would humble them,
By ſending theſe affrights, while we are here,
That we might laugh at their ridiculous fear. B. Johnſ. Catil.
The war at hand appears with more affright,
And riſes ev'ry moment to the ſight. Dryden's Æneid.

AFFRIGHTFUL. adj. [from affright.] Full of affright or terrour, terrible.

We ſhall find there is an abſence of all that is deſtructive or affrightful to human nature. Decay of Piety.

AFFRIGHTMENT. n. ſ.

1. The impreſſion of fear, terrour.

Hearing ſhe was at reſt, he attended till ſhe ſhould awake of herſelf, which ſhe did with the affrightment of a dream. Wotton.

Paſſionate words or blows from the tutor, fill the child's mind with terrour and affrightment; which immediately takes it wholly up, and leaves no room for other impreſſion. Locke.

2. The ſtate of fearfulneſs.

Whether thoſe that, under any anguiſh of mind, return to affrightments or doubtings, have not been hypocrites. Hammond.

To AFFRONT v. a. [affronter, Fr. that is, ad frontem ſto, ad frontem & contumeliam adhibere, to inſult a man to his face.]

1. To meet face to face, to encounter. This ſeems the genuine and original ſenſe of the word, which was formerly uſed in a good or ill.

We have cloſely ſent for Hamlet hither,
That he, as 'twere by accident, may here
Affront Ophelia. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

The ſeditious, the next day, affronted [illegible] king's forces at the [illegible] reſolute to fight, they deſired enterparlance, and in the meantime they began to fortify. Sir John Hayward.

2. To meet, in an hoſtile manner, front to front.

His holy rites and ſolemn feaſts profan'd,
And with their darkneſs durſt affront his light. Parad.

[illegible] this ſenſe, it is obſerved by Cervantes, that, if a man ſtrikes another, he is injured, but not affronted; an affront always ſimply implying a juſtification of the act.

But harm precedes not ſin: only our foe,
Tempting affronts us with his foul eſteem
Of our integrity. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ix.
I would learn the cauſe, why Torriſmond,
With ſtorm my palace walls, when my hearing,
Almoſt within my ſight, affronts a prince,
Who ſhortly ſhall command him. Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

Thus brings to mind Fauſtina's fondneſs for the gladiator, and is interpreted as ſatire. But how can one imagine, that the Fathers would have dared to affront the wife of Aurelius. Addiſon.

AFFRO'NT. n. ſ. [from the verb affront.]

1. Inſult offered to the face, contemptuous or rude treatment.

He would often maintain Plantianus, in doing affronts to his ſon. Bacon's Eſſays.

You've done enough, for you deſign'd my chains
The grace is vaniſh'd, but th' affront remains. Dryd. Aureng.

He that is found reaſonable in one thing, is concluded to be ſo in all, and to think or ſay otherwiſe, is thought to offer an affront, and ſo ſenſeleſs a cenſure, that no body ventures to do it. Locke.

There is nothing which we receive with ſo much reluctance as advice: we look upon the man who gives it us, as offering an affront to our underſtanding, and treating us like children or ideots. Addiſon. Spectator, N° 512.

2. Outrage; act of contempt, in a more general ſenſe.

Oft have they violated
The temple, oft the law with foul affronts,
Abominations rather. Milton's Paradiſe Regained.

3. Open oppoſition, encounter; a ſenſe not frequent, though regularly deducible from the derivation.

Far beyond
The ſons of Anak, famous now and blaz'd,
Fearleſs of danger, like a petty god
I walk'd about admir'd of all, and dreaded
On hoſtile ground, none daring my affront. Samſon Agoniſt.

4. Diſgrace; ſhame. This ſenſe is rather peculiar to the Scottiſh dialect.

Antonius attacked the pirates of Crete, and, by his too great preſumption, was defeated; upon the ſenſe of which affront he died with grief. Arbuthnot on Coins.

AFFRO'NTER. n. ſ. [from affront.] The perſon that affronts.

AFFRO'NTING. participial adj. [from affront.] That which has the quality of affronting.

Among words which ſignify the ſame principal ideas, ſome are clean and decent, others unclean, ſome are kind, others are affronting and reproachful, becauſe of the ſecondary idea which cuſtom has affixed to them. Watts's Log.

To AFFUSE. v. a. [affundo, affuſum, Lat.] To pour one thing upon another.

I ſtruſtily poured on them acid liquors, to try if they contained any volatile ſalt or ſpirit, which would probably have diſcovered itſelf, by making an ebullition with the affuſed liquor. Boyle.

AFFU'SION. n. ſ. [affuſio, Lat.] The act of pouring one thing upon another.

Upon the affuſion of a tincture of galls, it immediately became as black as ink.

To AFFY'. v. a. [affier, Fr. affidare mulierem, Bracton.] To betroth in order to marriage.

Wedded be thou to the hags of hell,
For daring to affy a mighty lord
Unto the daughter of a worthleſs king. Shakeſp.

To AFFY'. v. n. To put confidence in, to put truſt in.

Marcus Andronicus, ſo I do affy
In thy uprightneſs and integrity,
That I will here diſmiſs my loving friends. Shak. Tit. Andr.

AFI'ELD. adv. [from a and field. See FIELD.] To the field.

We drove afield and both together heard
What time the grey fly winds her ſultry horn,
Batt'ning our flocks with the freſh dews of night. Milton.
Afield I went, amid the morning dew,
To milk my kine, for ſo ſhould huſewives do. Gay.

AFLA'T. adv. [from a and flat. See FLAT.] Level with the ground.

When you would have many new roots of fruit-trees, take a low tree, and bow it, and lay all his branches aflat upon the ground, and caſt earth upon them, and every twig will take root. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

AFLO'AT. adv. [from a and float. See FLOAT.] Floating, born up in the water. In a figurative ſenſe, within view, in motion.

There

There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows and in miseries.
On such a full sea are we now afloat,
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

Take any passion of the soul of man, while it is predominant and afloat, and, just in the critical height of it, hit it with some lucky or unlucky word, and you may as certainly over-rule it to your own purpose, as a spark of fire, falling upon gun-powder, will infallibly blow it up. South.

There are generally several hundred toads afloat, for they begin to cut above twenty-five leagues up the river above Hali, and there are other rivers that flow into the Inn, which bring in their contributions. Addison's Italy.

AFOOT. adv. [from a and foot]

1. On foot; not on horseback.

He thought best to return, for that day, to a village not far off; and dispatching his horse in some sort, the next day early, to come afoot thither. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. In action, as, a design is afoot.

I pr'ythee, when thou seest that act afoot,
Even with the very comment of thy soul
Observe mine uncle. Idem, ibid.

3. In motion.

Of Albany's and Cornwall's pow'rs you heard not—
'Tis said they are afoot. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

AFORE. prep. [from a and fore. See BEFORE.

1. Before, nearer in place to any thing, as, he stood afore him.

2. Sooner in time.

If your diligence be not speedy, I shall be there afore you.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

AFORE adv.

1. In time foregone or past.

Whosoever should make light of any thing afore spoken or written, out of his own house a tree should be taken, and he thereon be hanged. Esdras, vi. 22.

If he never drank wine afore, it will go near to remove his fit. Shakespeare's Tempest.

2. First in the way.

Æm. Ha, run you to the citadel,
And tell my lord and lady what hath happ'd,
Will you go on afore? Shakespeare's Othello.

3. In front; in the fore-part.

Approaching nigh, he reared high afore
His body monstrous, horrible and vast. Fairy Queen.

AFOREGOING participial adj. [from afore and going] Going before.

AFOREHAND adv. [from afore and hand].

1. By a previous provision.

Many of the particular subjects of discourse are occasional, and such as cannot aforehand be reduced to any certain account. Government of the Tongue.

2. Provided, prepared, previously fitted.

For it will be said, that in the former times, whereof we have spoken, Spain was not so mighty, as now it is, and England, on the other side, was more aforehand in all matters of power.
Bacon's Considerations on War with Spain.

AFOREMENTIONED. adj. [from afore and mentioned.] Mentioned before.

Among the nine other parts, five are not in a condition to give alms or relief to those aforementioned; being very near reduced themselves to the same miserable condition. Addison.

AFORENAMED adj. [from afore and named.] Named before.

Imitate something of circular form, in which, as in all other aforenamed proportions, you shall help yourself by the diameter. Peacham on drawing.

AFORESAID. adj. [from afore and said.] Said before.

It need not go for repetition, if we resume again
we find in the aforesaid experiment concerning assimilation.
Bacon's Natural History, N° 771.

AFORETIME adv. [from afore and time.] In time past.

O thou that art waxen old in wickedness, now thy sins which thou hast committed aforetime, are come to light. Susanna.

AFRAID. participial adj. [from the verb affray. It should therefore properly be written with ff.]

1. Struck with fear, terrified, fearful.

So persecute them with thy tempest, and make them afraid with thy storm. Psalm lxxxiii. 15.

2. It has often the particle of before the object of fear.

There, loathing life, and yet of death afraid,
In anguish of her spirit, thus she prays. Dryden's Fables.

If, while this wearied flesh draws fleeting breath,
Not satisfy'd with life, afraid of death,
It haply be thy will, that I should know
Glimpse of delight, or pause from anxious woe;
From now, from instant now, great Sire, dispel
The clouds that press my soul. Prior.

AFRESH adv. [from a and fresh. See FRESH.] Anew; again; after intermission.

The Germans now bring no such light horsemen, but serving on great horses, and charged with heavy armour, received hurt by their light horses, which, by galling their charge and again, at their pleasure, charging them afresh, when they saw the heavy horses almost weary. Knolles's History of the Turks.

When once we have attained these ideas, they may be excited afresh by the use of words. Watts's Logick.

AFRONT adv. [from a and front.] In front, in direct opposition to the face.

These four came all afront, and manly thrust at me.
Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

AFTER. prep. [æfter, Sax.]

1. Following in place. After is commonly applied to words of motion; as, he came after, and stood behind him. It is opposed to before.

What says lord Warwick, shall we after them?—
After them! nay, before them, if we can. Shak. Henry VI.

2. In pursuit of.

After whom is the king of Israel come out? After whom dost thou pursue? After a dead dog, after a flea. 1 Sam. xxiv. 14.

3. Behind.

Sometimes I placed a third prism after a second, and sometimes also a fourth after the third, by all which the image might be often refracted sideways. Newton's Opticks.

4. For.

Good after ill, and after pain delight,
Alternate, like the scenes of day and night. Dryden's Fab.

We shall examine the ways of conveyance of the sovereignty of Adam to princes that were to reign after him. Locke.

5. According to.

He that thinketh Spain our over-match, is no good muntman, but takes greatness of kingdoms according to bulk and currency, and not after their martial value. Bacon.

6. In imitation of.

There are, among the old Roman statues, several of Venus, in different postures and habits; as there are many particular statues made after the same design. Addison's Italy.

The salutation is after the oriental manner; thus in the psalms, how frequently are persons compared to cedars. Pope's Odyssey, notes.

AFTER. adv.

1. In succeeding time. It is used of time mentioned as succeeding some other. So we cannot say, I shall be happy after, but hereafter, but we say, I was first made miserable by the loss, but was after happier.

Far be it from me, to justify the cruelties which were at first used towards them, which had their reward soon after. Bacon.

The chief were those who, from the pit of hell
Roaming to seek their prey on earth, durst fix
Their seats long after next the seat of God. Paradise Lost.

2. Following another.

Let go thy hold, when a great wheel runs down a hill, lest it break thy neck with following it, but the great one that goes upward, let him draw thee after. Shakespeare's King Lear.

AFTER is compounded with many words, but almost always of its genuine and primitive signification, some, which occurred, will follow, by which others may be explained.

AFTER ACCEPTATION. [from after and acceptation.] A sense afterwards, not at first admitted.

'Tis true, some doctors in a former space,
I mean, in each apart, contract the place
Some, who to greater length extend the line,
The church's after acceptation join. Dryd. Hind and Panther.

AFTERAGES. n. s. [from after and ages.] Successive times, posterity. This word has no singular.

Not the whole land, which the Children should, or might in future time, conquer; seeing, in oft ages, they became lords of many nations. Raleigh's History of the World.

Nor to philosophers as praise denied,
Whose wise instructions afterages guide. Sir J. Denham.

What an opinion will afterages entertain of their religion, who had fair for a gibbet, by endeavouring to bring in a superstition, which their forefathers perished in flames to keep out.
Addison's Freeholder, N° 1.

AFTER ALL. When all has been taken into the view, when there remains nothing more to be added, at last; in fine, conclusion.

They have given no good proof in asserting this extravagant principle; for which, after all, they have no ground or colour, but a passage or two of Scripture, miserably perverted, in opposition to many express texts. Atterbury's Sermons.

But, after all, if they have any merit, it is to be attributed to some good old authors, whose works I had leisure to study.
Pope on Performs Poetry.

AFTERBIRTH. n. s. [from after and birth.] The membrane in which the birth was involved, which is brought away after; the secundine.

The exorbitances or degenerations of that, whether from a hurt in labour, or from part of the after-birth left behind, produce such violent effects.
Wiseman's Surgery.

AFTER-CLAP. n. s. [from after and clap.] Unexpected events happening after an affair supposed to be at an end.

For the next morrow's meed they closely went,
For fear of afterclaps to prevent. Spenf. Hub. Tale.
It is commonly taken in an ill ſenſe.

AFTERCOST n. f. [from after and coſt] The latter charges; the expence incurred after the original plan is executed.

You muſt take care to carry off the land-floods and ſtreams, before you attempt draining, leſt your aftercoſt and labour prove unſucceſsful. Mortimer's Husbandry.

AFTERCROP. n. f. [from after and crop.] The ſecond crop or harveſt of the ſame year.

Aftercrops I think neither good for the land, nor yet the hay good for cattle. Mortimer's Husbandry.

AFTER-DINNER. n. f. [from after and dinner] The hour paſſing juſt after dinner, which is generally allowed to indulgence and amuſement.

I have haſt nor youth nor age,
But, as it were, an after-dinner's ſleep,
Dreaming on both. Shakeſp. Meaſure for Meaſure.

AFTER-ENDEAVOUR. n. f. [from after and endeavour] Endeavours made after the firſt effort or endeavour.

There is no reaſon why the ſound of a pipe ſhould leave traces in their brains, which, not firſt, but by their after-endeavours, ſhould produce the like ſounds. Locke.

AFTER-ENQUIRY. n. f. [from after and enquiry.] Enquiry made after the fact committed, or after life.

You muſt either be directed by ſome that take upon them to know, or to take upon yourſelf that, which, I am ſure, you do not know, or lamp the after-enquiry on your peril, and how you ſhall ſpeed in your journey's end, I think, you'll never return to tell me. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

To AFTEREYE. v. a. [from after and eye.] To keep one in view; to follow in view.

Thou ſhouldſt have made him
As little as a crow, or leſs, ere left
To aftereye him. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

This ear, like certain vegetables, did bud and open ſlowly; nature ſometimes delighting to play an aftergame, as well as fortune, which had both their turns and tides in courſe. Wotton.

The fables of the ax-handle and the wedge, ſerve to precaution us not to put ourſelves needleſsly upon an aftergame, but to weigh beforehand what we ſay and do. L'Eſtrange's Fab.

Our firſt deſign, my friend, has prov'd abortive;
Still there remains an aftergame to play. Addiſon's Cato.

AFTERHOURS. n [from after and hours] The hours that ſucceed.

So ſmile the heav'ns upon this holy act,
That afterhours with ſorrow chide us not.
Shakeſpeare's Romeo and Juliet.

AFTER-LIVER. n. f [from after and live.] He that lives in ſucceeding times.

By thee my promiſe ſent
Unto myſelf, let after-livers know. Sidney, b.

AFTERLOVE. n. f. [from after and love.] The ſecond or later love.

Intended, or committed, was this fault?
If but the firſt, how heinous ere it be,
To win thy after-love, I pardon thee. Shakeſp. Richard II.

AFTERMATH. n. f. [from after, and math, from mow.] The latter math, the ſecond crop of graſs mown in autumn. See AFTERCROP.

AFTERNOON. n. f. [from after and noon.] The time from the meridian to the evening.

A beauty-waning and diſtreſſed widow,
Ev'n in the afternoon of her beſt days,
Made prize and purchaſe of his wanton eye.
Shakeſpeare's Richard III.

However, keep the lively taſte you hold
Of God, love him now, but fear him more;
And, in your afternoons, think what you told
And promiſ'd him at morning-prayer before. Donne.

Such, all the morning, to the pleadings run;
But when the buſineſs of the day is done,
On dice, and drink, and drabs, they ſpend the afternoon.
Dryden's Perſius, Sat 1.

AFTERPAINS. n. f. [from after and pain]
The pains after birth, by which women are delivered of the ſecundine.

AFTERPART. n. f. [from after and part.] The latter part
The flexibleneſs of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headſtrong, makes it more governable and ſafe; and, in the afterpart, reaſon and foreſight begin a little to take place, and mind a man of his ſafety and improvement. Locke.

AFTERPROOF. n. f [from after and proof.] Evidence poſterior to the thing in queſtion.

All know, that he likewiſe at firſt was much under the expectation of his afterproof, ſuch a ſolar influence there is in the ſolar aſpect. Wotton.

AFTERTASTE. n. f [from after and taſte] A taſte remaining upon the tongue after the draught, which was not perceived in the act of it.

AFTERTHOUGHT. n. f. [from after and thought] Reflections after the act, expedients formed too late. It is not properly to be uſed for ſecondthought.

Expence, and afterthought, and idle care,
And doubts of motley hue, and dark deſpair;
Suſpicions, and fantaſtick carriage,
And jealouſy ruffian'd with jaundice in her eyes,
Diſcolouring all ſhe view'd, in tawny dreſs'd,
Downlook'd, and with a cuckow on her fiſt. Dryd Fables.

AFTER-TIMES. n. f. [from after and time.] Succeeding times. See AFTERAGES.

You promiſ'd once, a progeny divine
Of Romans, riſing from the Trojan line,
In after-times ſhould hold the world in awe,
And to the land and ocean give the law. Dryd Virg. Æn.

AFTERTOSSING. n. f. [from after and toſs.] The motion of the ſea after a ſtorm.

Confuſions and tumults are only the impotent remains of an unnatural rebellion, and are no more than the aftertoſſings of a ſea, when the ſtorm is laid. Addiſon's Freeholder, N° 35

AFTERWARD. adv. [from after, and peapb, Sax.] In ſucceeding time; ſometimes written afterwards, but leſs properly.

Uſes not thought upon before, may afterward ſpring up, and be reaſonable cauſes of retaining that, which former conſiderations did formerly procure to be inſtituted.

An anxious diſtruſt of the divine goodneſs, makes a man more and more unworthy of it, and miſerable beforehand, for fear of being ſo afterward. L'Eſtrange.

AFTERWIT. n. f. [from after and wit] The contrivance of expedients after the occaſion of uſing them is paſt.

AFTERTHOUGHT

AGAIN adv. [agen, Sax.]

1. A ſecond time, once more; marking the repetition of the ſame thing.

The poor remnant of human ſeed, which remained in their mountains, peopled their country again ſlowly, by little and little. Bacon's New Atalantis.

Go now, deluded man, and ſeek again
New toils, new dangers, on the daſhy plain. Dryd. Æn.

Some are already retired into foreign countries; and the reſt, who poſſeſs lands, are determined never to hazard them again, for the ſake of eſtabliſhing their ſuperſtition. Swift.

2. On the other hand; marking ſome oppoſition or contrariety.

His wit encreaſed upon the occaſion, and ſo much the more, if the occaſion were ſharpened with danger. Again, whether it were the ſhortneſs of his foreſight, or the ſtrength of his will, certain it is, that the perpetual trouble of his fortunes could not have been without defects in his nature. Bacon.

Thoſe things that we know not what to do with, if we had them, and thoſe things, again, which another cannot part with, but to his own loſs and ſhame, are the very conditions of this fable. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

3. On another part, marking a tranſition to ſome new conſideration.

Behold yon mountain's hoary height,
Made higher with new mounts of ſnow;
Again, behold the winter's weight
Oppreſs the lab'ring woods below. Dryden.

4. In return, noting re-action, or reciprocal action; as, his fortune worked upon his nature, and his nature again upon his fortune.

5. Back; in reſtitution.

When your head did but ake,
I knit my handkerchief about your brows,
The beſt I had, a princeſs wrought it me,
And I did never aſk it you again. Shakeſp. King John.

6. In return for any thing, in recompence.

That he hath given will he pay again. Proverbs.

The cauſe of the hoary green, is the cold and compact ſubſtance of their leaves, and the pedicles of them; and the cauſe of that again is either the tough and viſcous juice of the plant, or the ſtrength and heat thereof. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

8. Beſides, in any other time or place.

They have the Waltonns, who are tall archers; yet that is but a ſpot of ground. But, on the other ſide, there is not in the world again ſuch a ſpring and ſeminary of brave mettled people, as in England, Scotland, and Ireland. Bacon.

9. Twice as much; marking the ſame quantity once repeated.

There are whom heav'n has bleſt with ſtore of wit,
Yet want as much again to manage it;
For wit and judgment ever are at ſtrife,
Tho' meant each other's aid, like man and wife. Pope.

I ſhould not be ſorry to ſee a chorus on a theatre, more than as large and as deep again as ours, built and adorned at a king's charges. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

10. Again and again; with frequent repetition, often.

This is not to be obtained by one or two haſty readings; it muſt be repeated again and again, with a cloſe attention to the tenour of the diſcourſe. Locke's Eſſay on St P. Epiſtles.

11. In oppoſition; by way of reſiſtance.

Who art thou that anſwereſt again? Rom. ix. 20.

AGA'INST. prep. [ongeon, ongeond, Sax.]

1. In oppoſition to any perſon.

And he will be a wild man; his hand will be againſt every man, and every man's hand againſt him. Gen. xvi. 12.

2. Contrary; oppoſite, in general.

That authority of men ſhould prevail with men either againſt or above reaſon, is no part of our belief. Hooker.

He is melancholy without cauſe, and merry againſt the hair. Shakeſp. Troilus and Creſſida.

We might work any effect without and againſt matter; and this not holpen by the co-operation of angels or ſpirits, but only by the unity and harmony of nature. Bacon's Natural Hiſt.

The preventing goodneſs of God does even wreſt him from himſelf, and ſave him, as it were, againſt his will. South.

The god, uneaſy till he ſlept again,
Reſolv'd, at once, to rid himſelf of pain;
And, tho' againſt his cuſtom, call'd aloud,
Exciting Morpheus from the ſleepy crowd. Dryden.

Men often ſay a thing is againſt their conſcience, when really it is not. Swift's Miſcellanies.

3. In contradiction to any opinion.

After all that can be ſaid againſt a thing, this will ſtill be true, that many things poſſibly are, which we know not of, and that many more things may be than are: and if ſo, after all our arguments againſt a thing, it will be uncertain whether it be or not. Tillotſon.

The church-clergy have written the beſt collection of tracts againſt popery, that ever appeared in England. Swift

4. With contrary motion or tendency; uſed of material action.

Boils and plagues
Plaiſter you o'er, that you may be abhorr'd
Farther than ſeen, and one infect another
Againſt the wind a mile. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

The kite being a bird of prey, and therefore hot, delighteth in the freſh air, and many times flieth againſt the wind, as trouts and ſalmons ſwim againſt the ſtream. Bacon.

5. Contrary to rule or law.

If aught againſt my life
Thy country ſought of thee, it ſought unjuſtly,
Againſt the law of nature, law of nations. M. Sam. Agon.
Againſt the public ſanctions of the peace,
Againſt all omens of their ill ſucceſs,
With fates averſe, the rout in arms reſort,
To force their monarch, and inſult the court. Dryden's Æn.

6. Oppoſite to, in place.

Againſt the Tiber's mouth, but far away. Dryden.

7. To the hurt of another.

And when thou think'ſt of her eternity,
Think not that death againſt her nature is;
Think it a birth: and when thou go'ſt to die,
Sing like a ſwan, as if thou went'ſt to bliſs. Sir J. Davies.

8. In proviſion for; in expectation of.

This mode of ſpeaking probably had its original from the [illegible] of making proviſion againſt, or in oppoſition to a time of [illegible] but by degrees acquired a neutral ſenſe.

[illegible] the them brought into a ſtately hall,
Wherein were many tables fair diſpred,
And ready dight with dainties feſtival, Fairy Queen.

The like charge was given them againſt the time they ſhould come to ſettle themſelves in the land promiſed unto their fathers. Hooker, b. v. § 11.

Some ſay, that ever 'gainſt that ſeaſon comes,
Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,
The bird of dawning ſingeth all night long:
And then they ſay no ſpirit walks abroad,
The nights are wholeſome, then no planets ſtrike,
No fairy tales, no witch hath power to charm;
So hallowed and ſo gracious is the time. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

To that purpoſe, he made haſte to Briſtol, that all things might be ready againſt the prince came thither. Clarendon.

Againſt the promiſ'd time provides with care,
And hafte is in the woof, the robes he was to wear. Dryd.

All which I grant to be reaſonably and truly ſaid, and only deſire they may be remembered againſt another day. Stillingfl.

AGA'PE. adv. [from a and gape.] Staring with eagerneſs, as a bird gapes for meat.

In himſelf was all his ſtate;
More ſolemn than the tedious pomp that waits
On princes, when their rich retinue long
Of horſes led, and grooms beſmear'd with gold,
Dazzles the crowd, and ſets them all agape. Paradiſe Loſt.

Dazzle the crowd, and ſet them all agape. Philips

The whole crowd ſtood agape, and ready to take the doctor at his word. Spectator, N° 572.

AGARICK n. ſ. [agaricum, Lat.] A drug of uſe in phyſick, and the dying trade. It is divided into male and female; the male is uſed only in dying, the female in medicine. the male grows on oaks, the female on larches.

There are two excreſcences which grow upon trees; both of them in the nature of muſhrooms. the one the Romans call boletus, which groweth upon the roots of oaks, and was one of the dainties of their table; the other is medicinal, that is called agarick, which groweth upon the tops of oaks; though it be affirmed by ſome, that it groweth alſo at the roots. Bacon.

AGA'ST. adv. [This word, which is uſually, by later authours, written aghaſt, is, not improbably, the true word derived from agaze, which has been written agaſt, from a miſtaken etymology. See AGHAST.]

Struck with terrour; amazed, frighted to aſtoniſhment.

Thus roving on
In confus'd march forlorn, th' adventrous bands,
With ſhudd'ring horrour pale, and eyes agaſt,
View'd firſt their lamentable lot, and found
No reſt. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ii. l. 616.

AGATE. n. ſ. [agate, Fr. achates, Lat.] A precious ſtone of the loweſt claſs, often clouded with beautiful variegations.

In ſhape no bigger than an agate ſtone,
On the forefinger of an alderman. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.

Agates are only varieties of the flint kind; they have a grey horny ground, clouded, lineated, or ſpotted with different colours, chiefly duſky, black, brown, red, and ſometimes blue. Woodward's Method of Foſſils.

A'GATY. adj. [from agate.] Partaking of the nature of agate.

An agaty flint was above two inches in diameter, the whole covered over with a friable cretaceous craſt. Woodward.

To AGA'ZE. v. a. [from a and gaze, to ſet a gazing; as, amaze, amuſe, and others.] To ſtrike with amazement; to ſtupify with ſudden terrour. The verb is now out of uſe.

So as they travell'd, ſo they gan eſpy
An armed knight toward them gallop faſt,
That ſeemed from ſome feared foe to fly,
Or other grieſly thing that him agaſt. Fairy Queen.

AGA'ZED. participial adj. [from agaze; which ſee.] Struck with amazement; terrified to ſtupidity.

Hundreds he ſent to hell, and none durſt ſtand him;
Here, there, and every where, enrag'd he flew:
The French exclaim'd; "The devil was in arms!"
All the whole army ſtood agazed on him. Shak. Henry VI.

AGE. n. ſ. [age, Fr. anciently eage, or aage; it is deduced by Menage, from ætatium, of ætas; by Junius, from aa, which, in the Teutonic dialects, ſignified long duration.]

1. Any period of time attributed to ſomething as the whole, or part, of its duration. in this ſenſe, we ſay, the age of man, the ſeveral ages of the world, the golden or iron age.

One man in his time plays many parts,
His life being ſeven ages. Shakeſpeare.

And Jacob lived in the land of Egypt ſeventeen years, ſo the whole age of Jacob was an hundred forty and ſeven years. [illegible]

2. A ſucceſſion or generation of men.

Hence, laſtly, ſprings care of poſterities,
For things their kind would everlaſting make.
Hence is it, that old men do plant young trees,
The fruit whereof another age ſhall take. Sir J. Davies.

Next, to the Son,
Deſtin'd Reſtorer of mankind, by whom
New heav'n, and earth, ſhall to the ages riſe,
Or down from heav'n deſcend. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

No declining age
E'er felt the raptures of poetic rage. Roſcommon.

Boys muſt not have th' ambitious care of men,
Nor men the weak anxieties of age. Roſcommon.

And on this forehead, where your verſe has ſaid,
The loves delighted, and the graces play'd,
Inſulting age will trace his cruel way,
And leave ſad marks of his deſtructive ſway. Prior

A G G

6. Maturity; ripeneſs; full ſtrength of life.

A ſolemn admiſſion of proſelytes, all that either, being of age, deſire that admiſſion for themſelves, or that, in infancy, are by others preſented to that charity of the church. Hammond.

We thought our ſires, not with their own content,
Had, ere we came to age, our portion ſpent. Dryden.

7. In law.

In a man, the age of fourteen years is the age of diſcretion, and twenty-one years is the full age: In a woman, at ſeven years of age, the lord her father may diſtrain his tenants for aid to marry her, at the age of nine years, ſhe is dowable; at twelve years, ſhe is able finally to ratify and confirm her former conſent given to matrimony, at fourteen, ſhe is enabled to receive her land into her own hands, and ſhall be out of ward at the death of her anceſtor; at ſixteen, ſhe ſhall be out of ward, though, at the death of her anceſtor, ſhe was within the age of fourteen years; at twenty-one, ſhe is able to alienate her lands and tenements. At the age of fourteen, a ſtripling is enabled to chooſe his own guardian, at the age of fourteen, a man may conſent to marriage. Cowel.

A'GED. adj. [from age. It makes two ſyllables in poetry.]

1. Old, ſtricken in years, applied generally to animate beings.

If the compariſon do ſtand between man and man, which ſhall hearken unto other, ſith the aged, for the moſt part, are beſt experienced, leaſt ſubject to raſh and unadviſed paſſions. Hooker, b. v. § 7.

Novelty is only in requeſt, and it is as dangerous to be aged in any kind of courſe, as it is virtuous to be conſtant in any undertaking. Shakeſp. Meaſure for Meaſure.

Kindneſs itſelf too weak a charm will prove,
To raiſe the feeble fires of aged love. Prior.

2. Old; applied to inanimate things. This uſe is rare, and commonly with ſome tendency to the proſopopœia.

The people did not more worſhip the images of gold and ivory, than they did the groves, and the ſame Quintilian ſaith of the aged oaks. Stillingfleet's Defence of Diſc. on Rom. Idol.

A'GEDLY adv. [from aged.] After the manner of an aged perſon.

AGE'N adv. [azen, Sax.] Again, in return. See AGAIN.

This word is only written in this manner, though it be in reality the true orthography, for the ſake of rhime.

Thus Venus: Thus her ſon reply'd agen,
None of your filters have we heard or ſeen. Dryden's Æn.

AGENCY. n. ſ. [from agent.]

1. The quality of acting, the ſtate of being in action; action.

A few advances there are in the following papers, tending to aſſert the ſuperintendence and agency of providence in the natural world. Woodward's Preface to Nat. Hiſtory.

2. The office of an agent or factor for another; buſineſs performed by an agent.

Some of the purchaſers themſelves may be content to live cheap in a worſe country, rather than be at the charge of exchange and agencies. Swift.

A'GENT. adj. [agens, Lat.] That which acts; oppoſed to patient, or that which is acted upon.

This ſucceſs is oft truly aſcribed unto the force of imagination upon the body agent, and then, by a ſecondary means, it may upon a diverſe body, as, for example, if a man carry a [illegible], or ſome part of a beaſt, believing ſtrongly that it will help him to obtain his love, it may make him more induſtrious, and again more confident and perſiſting than otherwiſe he would be. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 902.

AGENT n. ſ.

1. An actor; he that acts; he that profeſſes the faculty of action.

Where there is no doubt, deliberation is not excluded as impertinent unto the thing, but as needleſs in regard of the agent, which ſeeth already what to reſolve upon. Hooker.

To whom nor agent, from the inſtrument,
Nor pow'r of working, from the work is known: Davies.

Heav'n made us agents free to good or ill,
And forc'd it not, tho' he foreſaw the will
Freedom was firſt beſtow'd on human race,
And preſcience only held the ſecond place. Dryden.

A miracle is a work exceeding the power of any created agent, conſequently being an effect of the divine omnipotence. Scott's Sermons.

2. A ſubſtitute; a deputy; a factor; a perſon employed to tranſact the buſineſs of another.

— All hearts in love, uſe your own tongues;
Let every eye negotiate for itſelf,
And truſt no agent. Shakeſpeare.

They had not the wit to ſend to them, in any orderly faſhion, agents or choſen men, to tempt them, and to treat with them. Bacon's Henry VII.

Remember, Sir, your fury of a wife,
Who, not content to be reveng'd on you,
The agents of your paſſion will purſue. Dryden's Aureng.

3. That which has the power of operating, or producing effects upon another thing.

[illegible] produced wonderful effects, by the proper application of agents to patients. Temple.

GENERA'TION. n. ſ. [from ad and generatio, Lat.] The ſtate of growing or adhering to another body.

To make a perfect nutrition, there is required a tranſmutation of nutriment; now where this converſion or aggeneration is made, there is alſo required, in the aliment, a ſimilarity of matter. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To A'GGERATE. v. a. [from agger, Lat.] To heap up. Dict.

AGGEROSE. adj. [from agger, Lat.] Full of heaps. Dict.

To AGGLOMERATE v. a. [agglomero, Lat.]

1. To gather up in a ball, as thread.

2. To gather together.

To AGGLOMERATE v. n.

Beſides, the hard agglomerating ſalts,
The ſpoil of ages, would impetuous choke
Their ſecret channels. Thomſon's Autumn.

AGGLU'TINANTS. n. ſ. [from agglutinate.] Thoſe medicines or applications which have the power of uniting parts together.

To AGGLU'TINATE. v. n. [from ad and gluten, glue, Lat.] To unite one part to another; to join together, ſo as not to fall aſunder. It is a word almoſt appropriated to medicine.

It has got room enough to grow into its full dimenſion, which is performed by the daily ingeſtion of food that is gelled into blood, which being diffuſed through the body, is agglutinated to thoſe parts that were immediately agglutinated to the foundation-parts of the womb. Harvey on Conſumptions.

AGGLUTINA'TION. n. ſ. [from agglutinate.] Union, coheſion; the act of agglutinating; the ſtate of being agglutinated.

The occaſion of its not healing by agglutination, as the other did, was from the alteration the ichor had begun to make in the bottom of the wound. Wiſeman's Surgery.

AGGLU'TINATIVE. adj. [from agglutinate.] That which has the power of procuring agglutination.

Rowl up the member with the agglutinative roller. Wiſem.

If the king ſhould uſe it no better than the pope did, only to aggrandize covetous churchmen, it cannot be called a jewel in his crown. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Theſe furniſh us with glorious ſprings and mediums, to raiſe and aggrandize our conceptions, to warm our ſouls, to awaken the better paſſions, and to elevate them even to a divine pitch, and that for devotional purpoſes. Watts's Improv. of the Mind.

AGGRANDIZEMENT n. ſ. [aggrandiſſement, Fr.] The ſtate of being aggrandized; the act of aggrandizing.

A'GGRANDIZER. n. ſ. [from aggrandize.] The perſon that aggrandizes or makes great another.

To AGGRA'TE. v. a. [aggratare, Ital.] To pleaſe, to treat with civilities: a word not now in uſe.

And in the midſt thereof, upon the floor,
A lovely bevy of fair ladies ſate,
Courted of many a jolly paramour,
The which them did in moſt ſeemly wiſe amate,
And each one ſought his lady to aggrate. Fairy Queen.

To A'GGRAVATE. v. a. [aggravo, Lat.]

1. To make heavy, uſed only in a metaphorical ſenſe; as, to aggravate an accuſation, or a puniſhment.

A grove hard by, ſprung up with this their change,
His will who reigns above, to aggravate
Their penance, laden with fruit, like that
Which grew in paradiſe, the bait of Eve
Uſ'd by the tempter. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. x.

Ambitious Turnus in the preſs appears,
And aggravating crimes augment the fears. Dryd. Æneid.

2. To make any thing worſe, by the addition of ſome particular circumſtance, not eſſential.

This offence, in itſelf ſo heinous, was yet in him aggravated by the motive thereof, which was not malice or diſcontent, but an aſpiring mind to the papacy. Bacon's Henry VII.

AGGRAVA'TION. n. ſ. [from aggravate.]

1. The act of aggravating, or making heavy.

2. Circumſtances or accidents, which encreaſe the guilt of a crime, or the miſery of a calamity.

If it be weigh'd
By itſelf, with aggravations not surcharg'd,
Or elſe with juſt allowance counterpoiſ'd,
I may, if poſſible, thy pardon find
The eaſier towards me, or thy hatred leſs. Milt. Samſ.

He, to the ſins which he commits, hath the aggravation ſuperadded of committing them againſt knowledge, againſt conſcience, againſt light of the contrary law. Hammond's Fundam.

AGGREGATE adj. [aggregatus, Lat.] Framed by the collection of any particular parts into one maſs, body, or ſyſtem.

They had, for a long time together, produced many other intercept combinations, or aggregate forms of particular things, and inconſiſtent ſyſtems of the whole. Ray on the Creation.

A'GGREGATE. n. ſ. [from the verb.] The complex or collective reſult of the conjunction or acervation of many particulars.

The reaſon of the far greateſt part of mankind, is but an aggregate of miſtaken phantaſms, and, in things not ſenſible, a conſtant deluſion. Glanville's Scepſis Scient.

A great number of such living and thinking particles could not possibly, by their mutual contact, and pressing, and striving, compose one greater individual animal, with one mind and understanding, and a vital connexion of the whole body; any more than a swarm of bees, or a crowd of men and women, can be conceived to make up one particular living creature, compounded and constituted of the aggregate of them all. Bentl.

To A'GGREGATE. v. a. [aggrego, Lat.] To collect together, to heap many particulars into one mass.

Death, with his mace petrifick, cold, and dry,
As with a trident, smote. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

AGGREGA'TION. n. f. [from aggregate.]

1. The collection, or act of collecting many particulars into one whole.

The water resident in the abyss is, in all parts of it, stored with a considerable quantity of heat, and more especially in those where these extraordinary aggregations of that fire happen. Woodward's Nat. History.

2. The whole composed by the coacervation of many particulars; an aggregate.

3. Collection, or state of being collected.

Their individual imperfections being great, they are more- [illegible] single numbers, once huddled together, they will be er- [illegible] itself. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i.

To AGGRE'SS. v. n. [aggredior, aggressum, Lat.] To commit the first act of violence; to begin the quarrel.

The rage dispers'd, the glorious pair advance
With mingled anger, and collected might,
To turn the war, and tell aggressing France,
How Britain's sons, and Britain's friends can fight. Prior.

AGGRE'SSION. n. f. [aggressio, Lat.] The first act of injury; commencement of a quarrel by some act [illegible] quity.

There is no resisting of a common enemy, without an union for a mutual defence; and there may be also, on the other hand, a conspiracy of common enmity and aggression. L'Estr.

AGGRE'SSOR. n. f. [from aggress.] The person that first commences hostility; the assaulter or invader, opposed to the de-

Fly in nature's face?
But how, if nature fly in my face first?
Then nature's the aggressor. Let her look to't.
Dryden's Spanish Friar.

It is a very unlucky circumstance, to be obliged to retaliate the injuries of such authours, whose works are so soon forgotten, that we are in danger already of appearing the first aggressors. Pope and Swift's Preface to Miscellanies

AGGRI'EVANCE. n. f. [See GRIEVANCE.] Injury; hardship inflicted; wrong endured.

To AGGRIEVE. v. a. [from grief, Lat. See To grieve.]

1. To give sorrow; to cause grief, to vex. It is not improbable, that to grieve was originally neuter, and aggrieve the active.

But while therein I took my chief delight,
I saw, alas! the gaping earth devour
The spring, the place, and all clean out of sight.
Which yet aggrieves my heart even to this hour. Spenser.

2. To impose some hardships upon, to harrass, to hurt in one's right. This is a kind of juridical sense, and whenever it is used now, it bears some allusion to forms of law.

Sewall, archbishop of York, much aggrieved with some practices of the pope's collectors, took all patiently. Camden.

The landed man finds himself aggrieved, by the falling of his rents, and the straightening of his fortune, whilst the monied man keeps up his gain, and the merchant thrives and grows rich by trade. Locke

Of injuries, and mighty wrongs receiv'd,
Of companies, and wond'rously's aggriev'd. Granville.

To AGGRO'UP. v. a. [aggruppare, Ital.] To bring together into one figure, to crowd together, a term of painting.

Bodies of divers natures, which are aggrouped (or combined) together, are agreeable and pleasant to the sight; as also those things which appear to be performed with ease. Dryd. Dufr.

AGHA'ST adj. [either the participle of agaze, (see AGAZE) and then to be written agazed, or agoft, or from a and gast, a ghost, which the present orthography favours; perhaps they were originally different words.]

Struck with horrour, as at the sight of a spectre, stupified with terrour. It is generally applied to the external appearance.

Who fighting sore, as if her heart in twaine
Had riven been, and all her heart-strings brast,
With dreary drooping eyne look'd up like one aghast. Spens.
The aged earth aghast,
With terrour of that blast,
Shall from the surface to the centre shake. Addi. Che Nat.
Aghast he wak'd, and, starting from his bed,
Cold sweat in clammy drops his limbs o'erspread. Dryd. Æn.
I laugh to think how your unshaken Cato
Will look aghast, while unforeseen destruction
Pours in upon him thus from every side. Addison Cato

A'GILE. adj. [agile, Fr. agilis, Lat.] Nimble, ready; having the quality of being speedily put in motion, active.

With that he gave his able horse the head,
And bending forward struck his agile heels
Against the panting sides of his poor jade,
Up to the rowel-head. Shakesp. Henry IV.

The immediate and agile subservience of the spirits to the empire of the mind or soul. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To guide its actions with informing care,
In peace to judge, to conquer in the war,
Render it agile, witty, valiant, sage,
As fits the various course of human age. Prior

AGILENESS. n. f. [from agile.] The quality of being agile, nimbleness, readiness for motion; quickness, activity; agility.

AGI'LITY. n. f. [agilitas, Lat. from agilis, agile.] Nimbleness; [illegible]

A limb over-strained by lifting a weight above its power, may never recover its former agility and vigour. Watts.

AGI'LLOCHUM. n. f. Aloes-wood.

A tree in the East-Indies, brought to us in small bits, of a very fragrant scent. It is hot, drying, and accounted a strengthener of the nerves in general. The best is of a black [illegible] purple colour, and so light as to swim upon water. Quincy.

AGIO. n. f. [an Italian word, signifying ease or convenience.]

A mercantile term, used chiefly in Holland and Venice, for the difference between the value of bank notes, and the current money. Chambers.

To AGI'ST. v. a. [from giste, Fr. a bed or resting-place, or from gister, i. e. stabulari.]

To take in and feed the cattle of strangers in the king's forest, and to gather the money. The officers that do this, are called agistors, in English guest or gist-takers. Their function is termed agistment, as, agistment upon the sea banks. This word agist is also used, for the taking in of other men's cattle into any man's ground, at a certain rate per week. Blount.

AGI'STMENT. n. f. [See AGIST.]

It is taken by the canon lawyers in another sense than is mentioned under agist. They seem to intend by it, a modus or composition, or mean rate, at which some right or due may be reckoned; perhaps it is corrupted from adæquiescent, or adjustment.

AGI'STOR. n. f. [from agist.] An officer of the king's forest. See AGIST.

AGITABLE. n. f. [from agitate, agitabilis, Lat.] That which may be agitated, or put in motion; perhaps that which may be disputed. See AGITATE, and AGITATION.

To A'GITATE. v. a. [agito, Lat.]

1. To put in motion; to shake; to move nimbly; as, the surface of the waters is agitated by the wind, the vessel was broken by agitating the liquour.

2. To be the cause of motion; to actuate, to move.

Where dwells this sov'reign arbitrary soul,
Which does the human animal controul,

Ah! sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil doers, children that are corrupters, they have forsaken the Lord. Isaiah, i. 4.

2. Sometimes contempt and exultation.

Let them not say in their hearts, Ah! so we would have it: let them not say, we have swallowed him up. Psalm xxxv.

3. Sometimes, and most frequently, compassion and complaint.

In youth alone, unhappy mortals live;
But, ah! the mighty bliss is fugitive
Discolour'd sickness, anxious labour come,
And age and death's inexorable doom. Dryd. Virg. Georg.
Ah me! the blooming pride of May,
And that of beauty, are but one
At morn both flourish bright and gay,
Both fade at evening, pale, and gone. Prior.

4. When it is followed by that, it expresses vehement desire.

In goodness, as in greatness, they excel,
Ah that! we loved ourselves but half so well. Dryd. Juven.

AHA', AHA'! interjection. A word intimating triumph and contempt.

They opened their mouth wide against me, and said, Aha, aha! our eye hath seen it. Psalm xxxv. 21.

AHE'AD adv. [from a and head.]

1. Farther onward than another: a sea term.

And now the mighty Centaur seems to lead,
And now the speedy dolphin gets ahead. Dryden's Æn.

2. Headlong; precipitant: used of men.

It is mightily the fault of parents, guardians, tutors, and governours, that so many men miscarry. They suffer them at first to run ahead, and, when perverse inclinations are advanced to habits, there is no dealing with them. L'Estrange's Fab.

AHE'IGHT. adv. [from a and height.] Aloft; on high.

But have I fallen or no?—
—From the dread summit of this chalky bourne!
Look up aheight, the shrill-gorg'd lark so far
Cannot be seen or heard. Shakespeare's King Lear.

AHOUAI. n. s. The name of a plant.

It hath funnel-shaped flowers of one leaf, divided into several parts at the top, the pointal, which rises from the cup, is fixed, like a nail, to the inner part of the flower, and becomes a pear-shaped fleshy fruit, inclosing a three-cornered nut.

There are two species of this plant abounding on the continent of South America: the first grows to the height of our common cherry-tree; its leaves are three or four inches long, and almost two inches broad, the wood of it stinks most abominably, and the kernel of the nut is a most deadly poison, to expel which, the Indians know no antidote, nor will they use the wood for fuel. The second sort, with an oleander leaf, and a yellow flower, does not grow higher than ten or twelve feet, its fruit is of a beautiful red colour when ripe, and equally poisonous with the former. Both plants abound in every part with a milky juice. Miller.

To AID. v. a. [aider, Fr. from adjutare, Lat.] To help; to support, to succour.

Into the lake he leapt, his lord to aid,
(So love the dread of danger doth despise)
And of him catching hold, him strongly staid
From drowning. Fairy Queen, b. ii. c. 6.

Neither shall they give any thing unto them that make war upon them, or aid them with victuals, weapons, money, or ships. Maccabees, viii. 26.

By the loud trumpet, which our courage aids,
We learn that sound as well as sense persuades. Roscommon.

AID. n. s. [from To aid.]

1. Help, support.

The memory of useful things may receive considerable aid, if they are thrown into verse. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

Your patrimonial stores in peace possess;
Undoubted all your filial claim confess.
Your private right should impious power invade,
The peers of Ithaca would arm in aid. Pope's Odyssey, b. i.

2. The person that gives help or support; a helper.

Thou hast said, it is not good that man should be alone, let us make unto him an aid, like unto himself. Tobit, viii. 6.

3. In law.

A subsidy. Aid is also particularly used in matter of pleading, for a petition made in court, for the calling in of help from another, that hath an interest in the cause in question: and is likewise both to give strength to the party that prays it aid of him, and also to avoid a prejudice accruing toward his own right, except it be prevented: as, when a tenant for term of life, courtesy, &c. being impleaded touching his estate, he may pray in aid of him in the reversion; that is, entreat the court, that he may be called in by writ, to allege what he thinks good for the maintenance both of his right and his own.

A'IDANCE. n. s. [from aid.] Help, support: a word little used.

Oft have I seen a timely parted ghost,
Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless,
Being all descended to the labring heart,

A I M

Who, in the conflict that it holds with death,
Attracts the same for aidance 'gainst the enemy. Sh. Hen. VI.

A'IDANT. adj [aidant, Fr.] Helping, helpful.

Spring with my tears, be aidant and remediate
In the good man's distress. Shakesp. King Lear.

A'IDER n. s. [from aid.] He that brings aid or help, a helper, an ally.

All along as he went, were punished the adherents and aiders of the late rebels. Bacon's Henry VII.

AIDLESS. adj. [from aid and less, an inseparable particle.] Helpless; unsupported, undefended.

Alone he enter'd
The mortal gate o' the city, which he painted
\[illegible]
And, with a sudden re-enforcement, struck
Corioli, like a planet. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Had met
Already, ere my best speed could prevent,
The aidless innocent lady, his wish'd prey. Milt. Comus.

AIGUILET. n. s. [aguilet, Fr.] A point with tags; points of gold at the end of fringes.

Which all above besprinkled was throughout
With golden aiguilets that glister'd bright,
Like twinkling stars, and all the skirt about
Was hemm'd with golden fringes. Fairy Queen, b.

To AIL. v. a [eglan, Sax. to be troublesome.]

1. To pain; to trouble; to give pain.

And the angel of God called to Hagar out of heaven, and said unto her, what aileth thee, Hagar? fear not, for God hath heard the voice of the lad where he is. Gen. xxi. 17.

2. It is used, in a sense less determinate, for to affect in any manner, as, something ails me that I cannot find out; what ails the man that he laughs without reason?

Love smil'd, and thus said, Want pin'd to desire is unhap,
But if he sought do desire, what can Heraclitus ail? Sidney.
What ails me, that I cannot lose thy thought Command the empress hither to be brought,
I, in her death, shall some diversion find,
And rid my thoughts at once of woman-kind.
Dryden's Tyrannick Love.

3. To feel pain; to be incommoded.

4. It is remarkable, that this word is never used but with some indefinite term, or the word nothing; as, What ails him? What does he ail? He ails something, he ails nothing. Something ails him, nothing ails him. Thus we never say, a fever ails him, or he ails a fever, or use definite terms with this verb.

AIL. n. s. [from the verb.] A disease.

Or heal, O Nurses, thy obscener ail. Pope.

A'ILMENT. n. s. [from ail.] Pain; disease.

Little ailments oft attend the fair,
Not decent for a husband's eye or ear. Granville.

I am never ill, but I think of your ailments, and repine that they mutually hinder our being together. Swift's Letters.

A'ILING. participial adj. [from To ail.] Sickly; full of complaints.

To AIM. v. a. [It is derived by Skinner from esmer, to point at; a word which I have not found.]

1. To endeavour to strike with a missive weapon, to direct towards, with the particle at.

Aim'st thou at princes, all amaz'd they said,
The last of games? Pope's Odyssey.

2. To point the view, or direct the steps towards any thing, to tend towards, to endeavour to reach or obtain, with to formerly, now only with at.

Lo, here the world is bliss, lo here the end
To which all men do aim, rich to be made,
Such grace now to be happy is before thee laid. Fairy Q.

Another kind there is, which although we desire for itself, as health, and virtue, and knowledge, nevertheless they are not the last mark whereat we aim, but have their further end whereunto they are referred. Hooker, b. i.

Swoln with applause, and aiming still at more,
He now provokes the sea gods from the shore. Dryden's Æn.

Religion tends to the ease and pleasure, the peace and quality of our minds, which all the wisdom of the world did always aim at, as the utmost felicity of this life. Tillotson.

3. To direct the missile weapon, more particularly taken for the act of pointing the weapon by the eye, before its dismission from the hand.

And proud Ideus, Priam's charioteer,
Who shakes his empty reins, and aims at empty spear. Dryd.

4. To guess.

AIM. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The direction of a missile weapon.

Alcanius, young and eager of his
Soon bent his bow, uncertain of his aim,
But the dire fiend the fatal arrow guides,
Which pierc'd his bowels through the panting sides.

2. The point to which the thing thrown is directed.

That arrows fled not ſwifter toward their aim,
Than did our ſoldiers, aiming at their ſafety,
Fly from the field. Shakeſp. Henry IV. p. II.

3. In a figurative ſenſe, a purpoſe, a ſcheme, an intention, a deſign.

He truſted to have equal'd the moſt High,
If he oppoſed; and, with ambitious aim
Againſt the throne, and monarchy of God,
Raiſ'd impious war. Milton's Parad. Loſt, b. i. l. 41.

But ſee, how oft ambitious aims are croſt,
And chiefs contend till all the prize is loſt. Pope.

4. The object of a deſign; the thing after which any one endeavours.

The ſafeſt way is to ſuppoſe, that the epiſtle has but one aim, till, by a frequent peruſal of it, you are forced to ſee there are diſtinct independent parts. Locke's Eſſay on St Paul's Epiſtles.

5. Conjecture, gueſs.

It is impoſſible, by aim, to tell it, and, for experience [illegible] thereof, I do not think that there was ever any [illegible] of Spenſer on Ireland.

[illegible] ring the nature of the times deceas'd,
The which obſerv'd, a man may prophecy,
With a near aim, of the main chance of things,
As yet not come to life, which in their ſeeds
And weak beginnings lie intreaſur'd. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

AIR n. ſ. [air, Fr. aer, Lat.]

1. The element encompaſſing the terraqueous globe.

If I were to tell what I mean by the word air, I may ſay, it is that fine matter which we breathe in and breathe out continually, or it is that thin fluid body, in which the birds fly, a little above the earth; or it is that inviſible matter, which fills all places near the earth, or which immediately encompaſſes the globe of earth and water. Watts's Logick.

2. The ſtate of the air, or the air conſidered with regard to health.

There be many good and healthful airs, that do appear by habitation and other proofs, that differ not in ſmell from other airs. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 904.

3. Air, a motion; a ſmall gentle wind.

[illegible] freſh gales, and gentle airs,
Whiſper'd it to the woods, and from their wings
Flung roſe, flung odours from the ſpicy ſhrub
Diſporting! Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. VIII. l. 515

But ſafe repoſe, without an air of breath,
Dwells here, and a dumb quiet next to death. Dryden.

Let vernal airs through trembling oſiers play,
And Albion's cliffs reſound the rural lay. Pope's Paſtorals.

4. Blaſt.

All the ſtor'd vengeances of heaven fall
On her ingrateful top! ſtrike her young bones,
You taking airs, with lameneſs. Shakeſp. King Lear.

5. Any thing light or uncertain, that is as light as air.

O momentary grace of mortal men,
Which we more hunt for than the grace of God!
Who builds his hope in air of your fair looks,
Lives like a drunken ſailor on a maſt,
Ready, with ev'ry nod, to tumble down
Into the fatal bowels of the deep. Shakeſp. Rich. III.

6. The open weather, air unconfined.

The garden was incloſed within the ſquare,
Where young Emma took the morning air. Dryd. Fables.

7. Vent, utterance; emiſſion into the air.

I would have aſk'd you, if I durſt for ſhame,
If ſhe you lov'd? you gave it air before me.
But ah! why were we not both of a ſex?
For then we might have lov'd without a crime. Dryd. D. Seb.

8. Publication; expoſure to the public view and knowledge.

I am ſorry to find it has taken air, that I have ſome hand in theſe papers. Pope's Letters.

9. Intelligence, information.

It grew alſo from the airs, which the princes and ſtates abroad received from their ambaſſadors and agents here, which [illegible] ing the court in great number. Bacon's Henry VII.

10. Poetry; a ſong.

And the repeated air
Of ſad Electra's poet, had the pow'r
To ſave th' Athenian walls from ruin bare. Parad. Regain.

11. Muſick, whether light or ſerious.

This muſick crept by me upon the waters,
Allaying both their fury and my paſſion,
With its ſweet air. Shakeſpeare's Tempeſt.

Call in ſome muſick; I have heard, ſoft airs
Can charm our ſenſes, and expel our cares. Drub. Sophy.

The ſame airs, which ſome entertain with moſt delightful tranſports, to others are importune. Glanville's Sceptis Scient.

Since we have ſuch a treaſury of words, ſo proper for the airs of muſick, I wonder that perſons ſhould give ſo little attention. Addiſon. Spectator, N° 406.

Born on the ſwelling notes, our ſouls aſpire,
While ſolemn airs improve the ſacred fire;
And angels lean from heav'n to hear Pope's St. Cæcilia.

— When the ſoul is ſunk with cares,
Exalts her in enliv'ning airs. Pope's Cæcilia.

12. The mien, or manner, of the perſon.

Her graceful innocence, her ev'ry air,
Of geſture, or leaſt action, over aw'd
His malice. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. IX. l. 459

For the air of youth
Hopeful and cheerful, in thy blood ſhall reign
A melancholy damp of cold and dry,
To weigh thy ſpirits down; and laſt conſume
The balm of life. Milt. Par. Loſt, b. XI. l. 545

But, having the life before us, beſides the experience of all they knew, it is no wonder to hit ſome airs and features, which they have miſſed. Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.

There is ſomething wonderfully divine in the airs of this picture. Addiſon on Italy.

Yet ſhould the Graces all thy figures place,
And breathe an air divine on ev'ry face. Pope.

13. An affected or laboured manner or geſture; as, a lofty air, a gay air.

Whom Ancus follows, with a fawning air;
But vain within, and proudly popular. Dryd. Æn. VI.

There are of theſe ſort of beauties, which laſt but for a moment, as, the different airs of an aſſembly, upon the ſight of an unexpected and uncommon object, ſome particularity of a violent paſſion, ſome graceful action, a ſhape, a glance of an eye, a diſdainful look, a look of gravity, and a thouſand other ſuch like things. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

Their whole lives were employed in intrigues of ſtate, and they naturally give themſelves airs of kings and princes, of which the miniſters of other nations are only the repreſentatives. Addiſon's Remarks on Italy.

To curl their waving hairs,
Aſſiſt their bluſhes, and inſpire their airs. Pope.

He aſſumes and affects an entire ſet of very different [illegible], he conceives himſelf a being of a ſuperiour nature.

14. Appearance.

As it was communicated with the air of a ſecret, it ſoon found its way into the world. Pope's Ded. to Rape of the Lock.

15. [In horſemanſhip.] Airs denote the artificial or practiſed motions of a managed horſe. Chambers.

To AIR. v. a [from the noun air.]

1. To expoſe to the air.

Fleas breed principally of ſtraw or mats, where there hath been a little moiſture, or the chamber and bed-ſtraw kept cloſe, and not aired. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 696.

We have had, in our time, experience twice or thrice, when both the judges that ſat upon the jail, and numbers of thoſe that attended the buſineſs, or were preſent, ſickened upon it, and died. Therefore, it were good wiſdom, that, in ſuch caſes, the jail were aired, before they were brought forth. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 914.

As the ants were airing their proviſions one winter, up comes a hungry graſhopper to them, and begs a charity. L'Eſtrange's Fable.

Or wicker-baſkets weave, or air the corn,
Or grinded grain, betwixt two marbles turn. Dryd. Virgil.

2. To take the air, or enjoy the open air, with the reciprocal pronoun.

Nay, ſtay a little. —
Were you but riding forth to air yourſelf,
Such parting were too petty. Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

I aſcended the higheſt hills of Bagdat, in order to paſs the reſt of the day in meditation and prayer. As I was here airing myſelf on the tops of the mountains, I fell into a profound contemplation on the vanity of human life. Addiſon. Spect.

3. To open to the air, as, clothes.

The others make it a matter of ſmall commendation in itſelf, if they, who wear it, do nothing elſe but air the robes, which their place requireth. Hooker, b. V. § 29.

4. To air liquors; to warm them by the fire; a term uſed in converſation.

5. To make neſts. In this ſenſe, it is derived from aery, a neſt. It is now out of uſe.

You may add their buſy, dangerous, diſcourteous, yea, and ſometimes deſpiteful ſtealing, one from another, of the eggs and young ones; who, if they were allowed to air naturally and quietly, there would be ſtore ſufficient, to kill not only the partridges, but even all the good houſewives chickens in a country. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

AIRBLADDER. n. ſ. [from air and bladder.]

1. Any cuticle or veſicle filled with air.

The pulmonary artery and vein paſs along the ſurfaces of theſe airbladders, in an infinite number of ramifications. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The bladder in fiſhes, by the contraction and dilatation of which, they vary the properties of their weight to that of their bulk, and riſe or fall.

Though the airbladder in fiſhes ſeems neceſſary for ſwimming, yet ſome are ſo formed as to ſwim without it. Cudworth.

AIRBUILT. adj [from air and built.] Built in the air, without any ſolid foundation.

Hence the fool's paradiſe, the ſtateſman's ſcheme,
The airbuilt caſtle, and the golden dream,

The mad's romantick wish, the chymist's flame,
And poet's vision of eternal fame. Pope's Dunciad, b. .

AIR DRAWN. adj. [from air and drawn.] Drawn or painted in air.

This is the very painting of your fear,
Th[illegible]
Led you to Duncan. Shakesp. Macbeth.

A'IRER. n. f. [from To air.] He that exposes to the air.

A'IRHOLE. n. f. [from air and hole.] A hole to admit the air.

A'IRINESS. n. f. [from airy.]

1. Openness, exposure to the air.
2. Lightness; gaiety; levity.

The French have indeed taken worthy pains to make classick learning speak their language; if they have not succeeded, it must be imputed to a certain talkativeness and airiness represented in their tongue, which will never agree with the sedateness of the Romans, or the solemnity of the Greeks. Felton.

A'IRING. n. f. [from air.] A short journey or ramble to enjoy the free air.

This little fleet serves only to fetch them wine and corn, and to give their ladies an airing in the summer-season. Add on It.

A'IRLESS. adj. [from air.] Without communication with the the free air.

Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shakesp. J. Cæsar.

A'IRLING. n. f. [from air, for gayety.] A young, light, thoughtless, gay person.

Some more there be, slight airlings, will be won
With dogs, and horses, and perhaps a whore. B. John. Cavil.

A'IRPUMP. n. f. [from air and pump.]

A machine by whose means the air is exhausted out of proper vessels. The principle on which it is built, is the elasticity of the air; as that on which the waterpump is founded, is on the gravity of the air. The invention of this curious instrument is ascribed to Otto de Guericke, consul of Magdeburg, who exhibited his first publick experiments before the emperour and the states of Germany, in 1654. But his machine laboured under several defects, in the force necessary to work it, which was very great, and the progress very slow; besides, it was to be kept under water, and allowed of no change of subjects for experiments. However, Mr. Boyle, with the assistance of Dr. Hooke, removed several of these inconveniencies, though, still, the working of this pump was laborious, by reason of the pressure of the atmosphere at every exsuction, after a vacuum was nearly obtained. This labour has been since removed by Mr. Hawksbee; who, by adding a second barrel and piston, to rise as the other fell, and fall as it rose, made the pressure of the atmosphere on the descending one, of as much service as it was of difference in the ascending one. Vream made a further improvement in Hawksbee's air-pump, by reducing the alternate motion of the hand and winch to a circular one. Chambers.

For the air that, in exhausted receivers of airpumps, is exhaled from minerals, and flesh, and fruits, and liquours, is as true and genuine as to elasticity and density, or rarefaction, as that we respire in; and yet this factitious air is so far from being fit to be breathed in, that it kills animals in a moment, even sooner than the very absence of all air, or a vacuum itself. Bentley's Sermons.

A'IRSHAFT. n. f. [from air and shaft.] A passage for the air into mines and subterraneous places.

By the sinking of an airshaft, the air hath liberty to circulate, and carry out the steams both of the miners breath and the damps, which would otherwise stagnate there. Ray.

A'IRY. adj. [from air; aereus, Lat.]

1. Composed of air.

The first is the transmission, or emission, of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies, as, in odours and infections: and this is, of all the rest, the most corporeal. Bacon.

2. Relating to the air; belonging to the air.

There are fishes that have wings, that are no strangers to the airy region. Boyle.

3. High in air.

Whole rivers here forsake the fields below,
And, wondring at their height, through airy channels flow. Ibid.

4. Light as air; thin, unsubstantial, without solidity.

I hold ambition of so airy and light a quality, that it is but a shadow's shadow. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Still may the dog the wand'ring troops constrain
Of airy ghosts, and vex the guilty train;
And, with her grisly lord, his lovely queen remain. Dr. Eu.

5. Without reality; without any steady foundation in truth or nature; vain; trifling.

Nor think with wind
Of airy threats to awe whom yet with deeds
Thou can'st not. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

Nor (to avoid such meanness) soaring high,
With empty sound, and airy notions, fly. Roscommon.

I have found a complaint concerning the scarcity of money, which occasioned many airy propositions for the remedy of it. Temple's Miscellanies.

6. Fluttering, loose; as if to catch the air.

But the epick poem is too stately to admit those little ornaments. The painters draw their nymphs in thin and airy habits; but the weight of gold and of embroideries is reserved for queens and goddesses. Dryd. Fab. Ded.

By this name of ladies, he means all young persons, finely shaped, airy, and delicate; such as are nymphs and Naiads. Dryden's Dufresne.

7. Gay; sprightly; full of mirth, vivacious, lively, spirited, light of heart.

He that is merry and airy at shore, when he sees a sad and a loud tempest on the sea, or dances briskly when God thunders from heaven, regards not when God speaks to all the world. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

AISLE. n. f. [Thus the word is written by Addison, but perhaps improperly, since it seems deducible only from either aile, a wing, or allie, a path; and is therefore to be written aile.]

The walks in a church, or wings of a quire.

The abbey is by no means so magnificent as one would expect from its endowments. The church is one huge nef, with a double aisle to it; and, at each end, is a large quire. Addison.

AIT, or EYGHT. n. f. [supposed, by Skinner, to be corrupted from islet.] A small island in a river.

AJUTAGE. n. f. [ajutage, Fr.] An additional pipe to water works. D. A.

To AKE. v. n. [from ἄχος, Gr. and therefore more grammatically written ache. See ACHE.]

1. To feel a lasting pain, generally of the internal parts, distinguished from smart, which is commonly used of uneasiness in the external parts, but this is no accurate account.

To see, and be denied such common grace,
My wounds ake at you! Sanderson's Tr.

Let our finger ake, and it endues
Our other healthful members with a sense
Of pain. Shakesp. Othello.

Were the pleasure of drinking accompanied, the very moment, with that sick stomach and aking head, which, in some men, are sure to follow, I think, no body would ever set wine to touch his lips. Locke.

[illegible] he must ake, with daily toils oppress,
Ere long-wish'd night brings necessary rest. Prior.

2. It is frequently applied, in an improper sense, to the heart, as, the heart akes, to imply grief or fear. Shakespeare has used it, still more licentiously, of the soul.

Here shame dissuades him, there his fear prevails,
And each, by turns, his aking heart assails. Addis. Ov. Met.

My soul akes
To know when two authorities are up.
Neither supreme, how soon confusion
May enter. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

AKIN. adj. [from a and kin.]

1. Related to; allied to by blood, used of persons.

I do not envy thee, dear Pamela; only I could wish, that being thy sister in nature, I were not so far off akin in fortune. Sidney, b. ii.

2. Allied to by nature, partaking of the same properties, used of things.

The cankered passion of envy is nothing akin to the filly envy of the ass. L'Estrange, Fab. xxxvii.

Some limbs again in bulk or stature
[illegible], and not akin by nature
In concert act, like modern friends,
Because one serves the other's ends. Prior.

He separates it from questions with which it may have been [illegible]ted, and distinguishes it from questions which are akin to it. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

AL, ATTLE, ADLE, do all seem to be corruptions of [illegible] famous; as also, Alling and Adling, are corruptions of Æpeling, noble, splendid, famous. Gibson's Camden.

Al, Ald, being in Saxon, are derived from the Saxon Ealb, ancient, and so, oftentimes, the initial all, being mutated by the Normans, from the Saxon ealb. Idem, ibid.

ALABASTER. n. f. [Alabastrum, Lat.]

A kind of soft marble, easier to cut, and less durable, than the other kinds, some is white, which is most common, some of the colour of horn, and transparent, some yellow, like honey, marked with veins. The ancients used it to make boxes for perfumes. Savary.

Yet I'll not shed her blood,
Nor scar that whiter skin of hers than snow,
And smooth as monumental alabaster. Shakesp. Othello.

ALABASTER. adj. Made of alabaster.

I can not forbear reckoning part of an alabaster column, found in the ruins of Jove's portico. It is of the colour of fire, and may be seen over the high altar of St Maria in Campitello, for they have cut it into two pieces, and fixed it, in the shape of a cross, in a hole of the wall, so that the light passing through it, makes it look to those in the church, like a huge transparent cross of amber. Addison on Italy.

ALACK. interject. [This word seems only the corruption of alas.]

Alas, an expression of sorrow.

Alack! when once our grace we have forgot,
Nothing goes right; we would, and we would not.
Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

At thunder now no more I ſtart,
[illegible]
Nay, what's incredible, alack
I hardly hear a woman's clack. Swift

ALACRADAY. interjection. [This, like the former, is for alas the day.] A word noting ſorrow and melancholy.

ALA'CRIOUSLY. adv. [from alacris, ſuppoſed to be formed from alacer; but of alacriter I have found no example.]
Cheerfully; without dejection.

Epaminondas alacriouſly expired, in confidence that he left behind him a perpetual memory of the victories he had atchieved for his country. Government of the Tongue, § 4.

ALA'CRITY. n. ſ. [alacritas, Lat.] Cheerfulneſs, expreſſed by ſome outward token, ſprightlineſs, gayety; livelineſs, cheerfulneſs.

Wherefore, in the end, theſe orders were, on all ſides, aſſented unto with no leſs alacrity of mind, than cities, unable to hold out any longer, are wont to ſhew when they take conditions, ſuch as it liketh him to offer them, which hath them in the narrow ſtraits of advantage. Hooker's Preface.

Give me a bowl of wine,
I have not that alacrity of ſpirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have. Sh. Rich. III.

But glad, that now his ſea ſhould find a ſhore,
With freſh alacrity, and force renew'd,
Springs upward. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. [illegible]

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or ſooner underſtood the ſign to fly
With ſuch alacrity they bore away,
As if, to praiſe them all, the ſtates ſtood by. Dryd. Ann. Mir.

ALAMI'RE. n. ſ. The loweſt note but one in Guido Aretine's ſcale of muſick.

ALAMODE. adv. [à la mode, Fr.] According to the faſhion: a low word. It is uſed likewiſe by ſhopkeepers for a kind of thin ſilken manufacture.

ALA'ND. adv. [from a for at, and land.] At land; landed; on the dry ground.

He only, with the prince his couſin, were caſt aland, far off from the place whither their deſires would have guided them. Sidney, b. ii.

Three more, fierce Eurus, in his angry mood,
Daſh'd on the ſhallows of the moving ſand,
And, in mid ocean, left them moor'd aland. Dryd. Virg. Æn.

ALA'RM. n. ſ. [from the French, a l'arme, to arms; as, cri a l'arme, to call to arms.]

1. A cry by which men are ſummoned to their arms; as, at the approach of an enemy.

When the congregation is to be gathered together, you ſhall blow, but you ſhall not ſound an alarm. Numbers, x.

Behold, God himſelf is with us for our captain, and his prieſts with ſounding trumpets, to cry alarms againſt you.
2 Chron. xiii. 12.

The trumpets loud clangour
Excites us to arms,
With ſhrill notes of anger,
And mortal alarms. Dryden's Cæcilia

Taught by this ſtroke, renounce the wars alarms,
And learn to tremble at the name of arms. Pope's Iliad

2. A cry, or notice, of any danger approaching; as, an alarm of fire.

3. Any tumult or diſturbance.

Is it then true, as diſtant rumours run,
That crowds of rivals, for thy mothers charms,
Thy palace fill with inſults and alarms. Pope's Odyſſ. b. i.

To ALA'RM. v. a. [from alarm, the noun.]

1. To call to arms; to diſturb; as, with the approach of an enemy.

The waſp the hive alarms
With louder hums, and with unequal arms. Addiſon.

2. To ſurpriſe with the apprehenſion of any danger.

When rage miſguides me, or when fear alarms,
When pain diſturbs, or when pleaſure charms. Tickell on Addiſon.

3. To diſturb in general.

His ſon, Cupavo, bruſh'd the briny flood,
Upon his ſtern a brawny Centaur ſtood,
Who heav'd a rock, and threat'ning ſtill to throw,
With lifted hands alarm'd the ſeas below. Dryd. Æneid.

ALARMBELL. n. ſ. [from alarm and bell.] The bell that is rung at the approach of an enemy.

The alarmbell rings from our Alhambra walls,
And, from the ſtreets, ſound drums and atabales.
Dryden's Conqueſt of Granada.

ALA'RMING partic. adj. [from alarm.] Terrifying, awakening, ſurpriſing; as, an alarming meſſage; an alarming pain.

ALARMPOST. n. ſ. [from alarm and poſt.] The poſt or place appointed to each body of men, to appear at, when an alarm ſhall happen.

ALA'RUM. n. ſ. [corrupted, as it ſeems, from alarm. See ALARM.]

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our bruiſed arms hung up for monuments,
Our ſtern alarums chang'd to merry meetings
Shakeſpeare's Richard III.

Hence too, that ſhe might better hear,
She ſets a drum at either ear;
And loud or gentle, harſh or ſweet,
Are but th' alarums which they beat. Prior

To ALA'RUM. v. a. [corrupted from To alarm. See ALARM.]

Withered murder
(Alarum'd by his ſentinel the wolf,
Whoſe howl's his watch) thus with his ſtealthy pace,
With Tarquin's raviſhing ſtrides, tow'rds his deſign
Moves like a ghoſt. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

ALAS. interject. [helas, Fr. eylaes, Dutch.]

1. A word expreſſing lamentation, when we uſe it of ourſelves.

But yet, alas! O but yet alas! our haps be but hard haps.
Sidney, b. i.

Alas! how little from the grave we claim?
Thou but preſerv'ſt a form, and I a name. Pope's Epiſt.

2. A word of pity, when uſed of other perſons.

Alas! poor Proteus, thou haſt entertain'd
A fox to be the ſhepherd of thy lambs.
Shakeſp. Two Gentlemen of Verona.

3. A word of ſorrow and concern, when uſed of things.

Thus ſaith the Lord God, Smite with thine hand, and ſtamp with thy foot, and ſay, Alas! for all the evil abominations of the houſe of Iſrael. Ezekiel, vi. 11.

Alas! both for the deed, and for the cauſe!
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. xi. l. 461.

Alas! for pity of this bloody field,
Piteous indeed muſt be, when I, a ſpirit,
Can have ſo ſoft a ſenſe of human woes. Dryd. K. Arthur.

ALAS THE DAY. interject. Ah, unhappy day!

Alas the day! I never gave him cauſe. Shakeſp. Othello.

Alas a day! you have ruined my poor miſtreſs, you have made a gap in her reputation; and can you blame her, if ſhe make it up with her huſband? Congreve's Old Bachelor.

ALAS THE WHILE. interject. Ah, unhappy time!

Alas as the ſheep, ſuch was the ſhepherd's look;
For pale and wan he was, (alas the while!)
May ſeem he loved, or elſe ſome care he took. Spenſ. Paſtor.

ALA'TE. adv. [from a and late.] Lately, no long time ago.

ALB. n. ſ. [albus, Lat.] A ſurpiece, a white linen veſtment worn by prieſts.

ALBE'IT. adv. [a contraction of the words all be it ſo. Skinner.] Although; notwithſtanding; though it ſhould be.

This very thing is cauſe ſufficient, why duties belonging to each kind of virtue, albeit the law of reaſon teach them, ſhould, notwithſtanding, be preſcribed even by human law. Hooker.

Of one, whoſe eyes,
Albeit unuſed to the melting mood,
Drop tears, as faſt as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakeſp. Othello.

He, who has a probable belief, that he ſhall meet with thieves in ſuch a road, thinks himſelf to have reaſon enough to decline it, albeit he is ſure to ſuſtain ſome leſs, though yet conſiderable, inconvenience by his ſo doing. South's Sermons.

ALBUGI'NEOUS. adj. [albugo, Lat. the white of an egg.]
Eggs, I obſerve, will freeze in the albugineous part thereof.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii.

I opened it by inciſion, giving vent firſt to an albugineous, then to white concocted matter, upon which the tumour ſunk.
Wiſeman's Surgery.

Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ALCHYMICAL. adj. [from alchymy.] Relating to alchymy, produced by alchymy.

he roſe noble, then current for ſix ſhillings and eight pence, the alchymiſts do affirm as an unwritten verity, was made by projection or multiplication alchymical of Raymond Lully in the tower of London. Camden's Remains.

ALCHYMICALLY. adv. [from alchymical.] In the manner of an alchymiſt, by means of alchymy.

Raymond Lully would prove it alchymically. Camden.

ALCHYMIST. n. ſ. [from alchymy.] One who purſues or profeſſes the ſcience of alchymy.

To ſolemnize this day, the glorious ſun
Stays in his courſe, and plays the alchymiſt,
Turning, with ſplendour of his precious eye,
The meagre cloddy earth to glitt'ring gold. Shak. K. John.

Every alchymiſt knows, that gold will endure a vehement fire for a long time, without any change; and that after it has been divided by corroſive liquours, into inviſible parts, yet may preſently be precipitated, ſo as to appear in its own form. Grew.

A'LCHYMY. n. ſ. [of al, Arab. and χυμεια.]

1. The more ſublime and occult part of chymiſtry, which propoſes, for its object, the tranſmutation of metals, and other important operations.

There is nothing more dangerous than this licentious and deluding art, which changeth the meaning of words, as alchymy doth, or would do, the ſubſtance of metals, maketh of any thing what it liſteth, and bringeth, in the end, all truth to nothing. Hooker, b. v. § 58.

O he ſits high in all the people's hearts;
And that which would appear offence in us,
His countenance, like richeſt alchymy,
Will change to virtue, and to worthineſs. Shakeſp. J. Cæſar.

Princes do but play us; compared to this,
All honours mimick, all wealth alchymy. Donne.

2. A kind of mixed metal uſed for ſpoons, and kitchen utenſils.

The golden colour may be ſome mixture of orpiment, ſuch as they uſe to braſs in the yellow alchymy. Bacon.

White alchymy is made of pan-braſs one pound, and arſenicum three ounces, or alchymy is made of copper and tutpigmentum. Bacon's Phyſical Remains.

They bid cry,
With trumpets regal ſound, the great reſult
Tow'rds the four winds, four ſpeedy cherubim
Put to their mouths the ſounding alchymy,
By herald's voice explain'd. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b

ALCOHOL. n. ſ. An Arabick term uſed by chymiſts for a high rectified dephlegmated ſpirit of wine, or for any thing reduced into an impalpable powder. Quincy.

If the ſame ſalt ſhall be reduced into alcohol, as the chymiſts ſpeak, or an impalpable powder, the particles and intercepted ſpaces will be extremely leſſened. Boyle.

Sal volatile oleoſum will coagulate the ſerum on account of the alcohol, or rectified ſpirit which it contains. Arbuthnot.

ALCOHOLIZA'TION. n. ſ. [from alcoholize.] The act of alcoholizing or rectifying ſpirits, or of reducing bodies to an impalpable powder.

To A'LCOHOLIZE. v. a. [from alcohol.]

1. To make an alcohol, that is, to rectify ſpirits till they are wholly dephlegmated.
2. To communute powder till it is wholly without roughneſs.

A'LCORAN. n. ſ. [al and koran, Arab.] The book of the Mahometan precepts, and credenda.

If this would ſatisfy the conſcience, we might not only take the preſent covenant, but ſubſcribe to the council of Trent, yea, and to the Turkiſh alcoran; and ſwear to maintain and defend either of them. Sanderſon againſt the Covenant.

ALCO'VE. n. ſ. [alcoba, Span.]

A receſs, or part of a chamber, ſeparated by an eſtrade, or portion of a columne, and other correſpondent ornaments, in which is placed a bed of ſtate, and ſometimes ſeats to entertain company. Trevoux.

The weary'd champion falls in ſoft alcoves,
The nobleſt boaſt of thy romantick groves.
Oft, if the muſe preſage, ſhall he be ſeen
By Roſamonda fleeting o'er the green,
In dreams be hail'd by heroes' mighty ſhades,
And hear old Chaucer warble through the glades. Tickell.

Deep in a rich alcove the prince was laid,
And ſlept beneath the pompous colonnade. Pope's Odyſſ.

ALDER. n. ſ. [alnus, Lat.] A tree having leaves reſembling thoſe of the hazel, the male flowers, or katkins, are produced at remote diſtances from the fruit, on the ſame tree; the fruit is ſquamoſe, and of a conical figure.

The ſpecies are; 1. The common or round-leaved alder. 2. The long-leaved alder. 3. The ſcarlet alder.

These trees delight in a very moiſt ſoil, where few others will thrive, and are a great improvement to ſuch lands. They may be alſo planted on the ſides of brooks, and cut for poles every third or fourth year. The wood is uſed by turners, and will endure long under ground, or in water. Theſe trees are propagated either by planting layers, or truncheons, about three feet in length, in February or March. Miller.

Without the grot, a various ſilver ſcene
Appear'd around, and groves of living green,
Poplars and alders ever quivering play'd,
And nodding cypreſs form'd a fragrant ſhade. Pope's Odyſſ.

ALDERLI'EVEST. adj. ſuperl. [from ald, alder, old, elder, and leve, dear, beloved.] Moſt beloved; which has held the longeſt poſſeſſion of the heart.

The mutual conference that my mind hath had,
By day, by night, waking, and in my dreams,
In courty company, or at my beads,
With you, mine alderlieveſt ſovereign,

Makes me the bolder to ſalute my king
With rude terms. Shakeſp. Henry VI. p.

A'LDERMAN. n. ſ. [from ald, old, and man.]

1. The ſame as ſenator Gerusth. A governour or magiſtrate, originally, as the name imports, choſen on account of the experience which his age had given him.

I told him, myſelf, the mayor, and aldermen,
Are come to have ſome conf'rence with his grace. Sh. R. III.

Though my own aldermen conferr'd my bays,
To me committing their eternal praiſe,
Their full-fed heroes, their pacifick mayors,
Their annual trophies, and their monthly wars. Pope's Dun.

2. In the following paſſage it is, I think, improperly uſed.

But if the trumpet's clangour you abhor,
And dare not be an alderman of war,
Take to a ſhop, behind a counter lie. Dryd. Juv. Sat.

A'LDERMANLY. adv. [from alderman.] Like an alderman; belonging to an alderman.

Theſe, and many more, ſuffered death, in envy to their virtues and ſuperiour genius, which emboldened them, in exigencies (wanting an aldermanly diſcretion) to attempt ſervice out of the common forms. Swift's Miſcellanies.

ALDERN. adj. [from alder.] Made of alder.

Then aldern boats firſt plow'd the ocean,
The ſailors number'd then, and nam'd each ſtar. May's Virg.

ALE. n. ſ. [eale, Sax.]

1. A liquour made by infuſing malt [See MALT] in hot water, and then fermenting the liquour.

I'll ſcratch your heads; you muſt be ſeeing chriſtenings. Do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude raſcals? Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

The fertility of the ſoil in grain, and its being not proper for vines, put the Egyptians upon drinking ale, of which they were the inventors. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. A merry meeting uſed in country places.

And all the neighbourhood, from old records
Of antick proverbs drawn from Whitſon lords,
And their authorities at wakes and ales,
With country precedents, and old wives tales,
We bring you now Ben. Johnſon.

A'LEBERRY. n. ſ. [from ale and berry.] A beverage made by boiling ale with ſpice and ſugar, and ſops of bread; a word only uſed in converſation.

ALE BREWER. n. ſ. [from ale and brewer.] One that profeſſes to brew ale.

The ſummer-made malt brews ill, and is ſtruck by moſt of our ale brewers. Mortimer's Husbandry.

ALECONNER. n. ſ. [from ale and can.] An officer in the city of London, whoſe buſineſs is to inſpect the meaſures of publick houſes. Four of them are choſen or rechoſen annually by the common-hall of the city; and whatever might be their uſe formerly, their places are now regarded only as ſine-cures for decayed citizens.

A'LECOST. n. ſ. [perhaps from ale, and coſtus, Lat.] The name of an herb. Dict.

ALE'CTRYOMANCY, or ALE'CTOROMANCY. n. ſ. [ἀλεκτρυών and μαντεία.] Divination by a cock. Dict.

ALEGAR. n. ſ. [from ale and eager, ſour.] Sour ale; a kind of acid made by ale, as vinegar by wine, which has loſt its ſpirit.

A'LEGER. adj. [allegre, Fr. alacris, Lat.] Gay; chearful, ſprightly: a word not now uſed.

Certainly, this berrycoffee, the root and leaf betle, and leaf tobacco, of which the Turks are great takers, do all condenſe the ſpirits, and make them ſtrong and aleger. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

A'LEHOOF. n. ſ. [from ale and hoofh, heal.] Groundivy, ſo called by our Saxon anceſtors, as being their chief ingredient in ale. See GROUNDIVY.

Alehoof or groundivy, is, in my opinion, of the moſt excellent and moſt general uſe and virtue, of any plants we have among us. Temple.

A'LEHOUSE. n. ſ. [from ale and houſe.] A houſe where ale is publickly ſold; a tipling-houſe. It is diſtinguiſhed from a tavern, where they ſell wine.

Thou moſt beauteous inn,
Why ſhould hard-favour'd grief be lodg'd in thee,
When triumph is become an alehouſe gueſt? Sh. Rich. II.

One would think it ſhould be no eaſy matter to bring any man of ſenſe in love with an alehouſe; indeed of ſo much ſenſe, as ſeeing and ſmelling amounts to; there being ſuch ſtrong encounters of both, as would quickly ſend him packing, did not the love of good fellowſhip reconcile to theſe nuſances. Scath.

hee ſhal. each alehouſe, thee each ſhouſe mourn,
And ſwi'ring gunſhops ſowrer ſighs return. Pope's Dun.

[illegible] keeps are publickly to ſell.

You reſemble perfectly the two alehouſe keepers in Holland, who were at the ſame time burgomaſters of the town, and taxed one another's bills alternately. Bolingbroke to Swift.

A'LEKNIGHT. n. ſ. [from ale and knight.] A pot-companion; a tippler: a word now out of uſe.

The old aleknights of England were well depainted out of him, in the ale-houſe colours of that time, in this manner. Camden.

ALEMBICK n. f. A veſſel uſed in diſtilling, conſiſting of a veſſel placed over a fire, in which is contained the ſubſtance to be diſtilled, and a concave cloſely fitted on, into which the fumes riſe by the heat; this cover has a beak or ſpout, into which the vapours riſe, and by which they paſs into a ſerpentine pipe, which is kept cool by making many convolutions in a tub of water; here the vapours are condenſed, and what entered the pipe in fumes, comes out in drops.

Though water may be rarefied into inviſible vapours, yet it is not changed into air, but only ſcattered into minute parts, which meeting together in the alembick, or in the receiver, do preſently return into ſuch water as they conſtituted before. Boyle.

ALE'NGTH. adv. [from a for at, and length.] At full length; along, ſtretched along the ground.

ALE'RT adj. [alerte, Fr. perhaps from alacris, but probably from à l'art, according to art or rule.]

1. In the military ſenſe, on guard; watchful; vigilant; ready at a call.

2. In the common ſenſe, brisk; pert; petulant, ſmart; implying ſome degree of cenſure and contempt.

I ſaw an alert young fellow, that cocked his hat upon a friend of his, and accoſted him after the following manner. Well, Jack, the old prig is dead at laſt. Addiſon. Spect. N° 403.

ALE'RTNESS. n. f. [from alert.] The quality of being alert; ſprightlineſs; pertneſs.

That alertneſs and unconcern for matters of common life, which a campaign or two would infallibly have given him. Addiſon. Spectator.

ALE TASTER n. f. [from ale and taſter.] An officer appointed in every courtleet, and ſworn to look to the aſſize and the goodneſs of bread and ale, or beer, within the precincts of that lordſhip. Cowell.

ALE VAT. n. f [from ale and vat.] The tub in which the ale is fermented

A'LE WASHED. adj. [from ale and waſh.] Steeped or ſoaked in ale.

What a beard of the general's cut, and a horrid ſuit of the camp, will do among foaming battles and ale-waſhed wits, is wonderful to be thought on. Shakeſp. Henry V.

ALEWIFE. n. f. [from ale and wife.] A woman that keeps an alehouſe.

Perhaps he will ſwagger and hector, and threaten to beat and butcher an alewife, or take the goods by force, and throw them the bad halfpence. Swift's Draper's Letters.

ALEXANDERS. n. f. [Smyrnium, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The flowers are produced in umbels, conſiſting of ſeveral leaves, which are placed orbicularly, and expand in form of a roſe; theſe reſt upon the empalement, which afterward becomes an almoſt globular fruit, compoſed of two pretty thick ſeeds, ſometimes ſhaded like a creſcent, gibbous, and ſtreaked on one ſide, and plain on the other

The ſpecies are, 1 Common Alexanders 2. Foreign Alexanders, with a round leaf, &c

The firſt of theſe ſorts, which is that ordered by the college for medicinal uſe, grows wild in divers parts of England, and may be propagated by ſowing their ſeeds upon an open ſpot of ground in Auguſt. Miller.

ALEXANDER'S FOOT. n. f. The name of an herb.

ALEXA'NDRINE n. f. A kind of verſe borrowed from the French, firſt uſed in a poem called Alexander. They conſiſt, among the French, of twelve and thirteen ſyllables, in alternate couplets; and, among us, of twelve.

Our numbers ſhould, for the moſt part, be lyrical. For variety, or rather where the majeſty of thought requires it, they may be ſtretched to the Engliſh heroick of five feet, and to the French Alexandrine of ſix. Dryd.

Then, at the laſt, and only couplet fraught
With ſome unmeaning thing they call a thought,
A needleſs Alexandrine ends the ſong,
That, like a wounded ſnake, drags its ſlow length along
Pope's Eſſay on Criticiſm.

ALEXIPHA'RMICK adj. [from ἀλέξω and φάρμακον.] That which drives away poiſon, antidotal, that which oppoſes infection.

What ſome antidotal quality it may have, we have no reaſon to deny, for ſince theſe hoofs and horns are magnified for epilepſies, ſince not only the bone in the heart, but the horn of a deer, is alexipharmick. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ALEXITE'RICAL, or ALEXITE'RICK. adj. [from ἀλέξω.] That which drives away poiſon, that which reſiſts in fevers.

ALGATES. adv. [from all and gate. Skinner. Gate is the ſame as way, and is uſed for way in the Scottiſh dialect.] On any terms; now [illegible]
[illegible] ſer ever in en more,
[illegible]'s horſe ev'n then down fell,
[illegible] the fall his leg oppreſs'd ſo ſore,
That, for a ſpace, there muſt he algates dwell. Fairfax

ALGEBRA. n. f. [an Arabick word of uncertain etymology; derived, by ſome, from Geber the philoſopher; by ſome, from jebr, parchment, by others, from algebha, a bone-ſetter, by [illegible] theorick, which takes the quantity ſought, whether it be a number or a line, or any other quantity, as if it were granted, and, by means of one or more quantities given, proceeds by conſequence, till the quantity ſought is found, [illegible] of, as is found to be equal to ſome quantity or quantities which are known, and conſequently itſelf is known. The origin of this art is very obſcure. It was in uſe, however, among the Arabs, long before it came into this part of the world, and they are ſuppoſed to have borrowed it from the Perſians, and the Perſians from the Indians. The firſt Greek author of algebra was Diophantus, who, about the year 800, wrote thirteen books. In 1494, Lucas Pacciolus, or Lucas de Burgos, a cordelier, printed a treatiſe of algebra, in Italian, at Venice. He ſays, that algebra came originally from the Arabs, and never mentions Diophantus; which makes it probable, that that author was not yet known in Europe; whoſe method was very different from that of the Arabs, obſerved by Pacciolus and his firſt European followers. His algebra goes no farther than ſimple and quadratick equations, and only ſome of the others advanced to the ſolution of cubick equations. After ſeveral improvements by Vieta, Oughtred, Harriot, Deſcartes, Sir Iſaac Newton brought this art to the height at which it ſtill continues. Trevoux. Chambers

It would ſurely require no very profound ſkill in algebra, to [illegible]

ALGEBRAICK. } adj. [from algebra.]
ALGEBRAICAL. }

2. Containing operations of algebra, as, an algebraical computation.

ALGEBRA'IST. n. f. [from algebra.] A perſon that underſtands or practiſes the ſcience of algebra.

When any dead body is found in England, no algebraiſt or magicpherer can uſe more ſubtle ſuppoſitions, to find the demonſtration or cipher, than every unconcerned perſon doth to find the murderers. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

Confining themſelves to deſcribe almoſt nothing elſe but the ſynthetick and analytick methods of geometricians and algebraiſts, they have too much narrowed the rules of method, as though every thing were to be treated in mathematical forms. Watts's Logick.

A'LGID. adj. [algidus, Lat.] Cold; chill. D.

ALGI'DITY, } n. f. [from algid.] Chilneſs; cold. Dict.
ALGIDNESS. }

ALGIFIC. adj [from algor, Lat.] That which produces cold. D.

A'LGOR. n. f. [Lat.] Extreme cold, chilneſs. Dict.

A[illegible] } [illegible] the ſix operations of arithmetick, or the ſcience of numbers. Dict.
A'LGORITHM. }

ALGO'SE. adj. [from algor, Lat.] Extremely cold, chill. Dict.

A'LIAS. adv. A Latin word, ſignifying otherwiſe, often uſed in the trials of criminals, whoſe danger has obliged them to change their names, as, Simpſon alias Smith, alias Baker; that is, otherwiſe Smith, otherwiſe Baker.

ALIBLE. adj. [alibilis, Lat.] Nutritive, nou[illegible]; that which may be nouriſhed. Dict.

A'LIEN. adj. [alienus, Lat.]

1. Foreign, or not of the ſame family or land.

The mother plant admires the leaves unknown
Of alien trees, and apples not her own. Dryd. Virg. Georg.

But who can tell, what pangs, what ſharp remorſe,
Torment the Boian prince? from native ſoil
Exil'd by fate, torn from the tender embrace
Of weeping conſort, and deprived the ſight
Of his young gracieſs progeny, he ſeeks
Inglorious ſhelter in an alien land. Philips.

2. Eſtranged from; not allied to, adverſe to, with the particle from, and ſometimes to, but improperly

To declare my mind to the diſciples of the fire, by a ſimilitude not alien from their profeſſion. Boyle.

The ſentiment that ariſes, as a conviction of the deplorable ſtate of nature, to which ſin reduced us, a weak, ignorant creature, alien from God and goodneſs, and a prey to the great deſtroyer. Rogers's Sermons

They encouraged perſons and principles, alien from our religion and government, in order to ſtrengthen their faction on Swift's Miſcellanies

ALIEN n. f. [alienus, Lat.]

1. A foreigner; not a denizon; a man of another country or family; not allied, a ſtranger

In whomſoever theſe things are, the church doth acknowledge them for her children; them only ſhe holdeth for aliens and ſtrangers, in whom theſe things are not found. Hooker

If it be prov'd againſt an alien
He ſeeks the life of any citizen,
The party 'gainſt the which he doth contrive
Shall ſeize on half his goods. Shakeſp. Merch. of V.

The mere Iriſh were not only accounted aliens, but enemies, and altogether out of the protection of the law, ſo as it was capital offence to kill them. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

Thy place in council thou haſt rudely loſt,
Which by thy younger brother is ſupply'd,
And art almoſt an alien to the hearts
Of all the court and princes of my blood. Shak. Henry IV.

Their famous lawgiver condemned the perſons, who ſat ſtill in diviſions dangerous to the government, as aliens to the community, and therefore to be cut off from it. Addiſon. Freeholder.

2. In law

An alien is one born in a ſtrange country, and never naturaliſed. A man born out of the land, to it be within the limits beyond the ſeas, or of Engliſh parents out of the king's obedience, ſo the parents, at the time of the birth, be of the king's obedience, is not alien. If one born out of the king's allegiance, come and dwell in England, and children (if he beget any here) are not alien, but denizens. Cowell.

To A'LIEN v. a. [aliener, Fr. alieno, Lat.]

1. To make any thing the property of another

If the ſon alien thoſe lands, and then repurchaſe them again in fee, now the rules of deſcents are to be obſerved, as if he were the original purchaſer. Hale's Hiſtory of Common Law.

2. To eſtrange; to turn the mind or affection, to make averſe to, with from.

The king was wonderfully diſquieted, when he found, that the prince was totally alienated from all thoughts of, or inclination to, the marriage. Clarendon.

ALIENABLE. adj. [from To alienate.] That of which the property may be transferred

Land is alienable, and treaſure is tranſitory, and both muſt, at one time or other, paſs from him, either by his own voluntary act, or by the violence and injuſtice of others, or at leaſt by fate. Dennis's Letters.

To A'LIENATE. v. a. [aliener, Fr. alieno, Lat.]

1. To transfer the property of any thing to another

The countries were once chriſtian, and members of the church, and where the golden candleſticks did ſtand, though now they be utterly alienated, and no chriſtians left. Bacon.

2. To withdraw the heart or affections, with the particle from, where the firſt poſſeſſor is mentioned.

The manner of mens writing muſt not alienate our hearts from the truth. Hooker's Preface.

Be it never ſo true which we teach the world to believe, yet if once their affections begin to be alienated, a ſmall thing perſuadeth them to change their opinions. Hooker, Dedicat.

His eyes ſurvey'd the dark idolatries
Of alienated Judah. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. 1. l. 457.

Any thing that is apt to diſturb the world, and to alienate the affections of men from one another, ſuch as croſs and diſtaſteful humours, is, either expreſsly, or by clear conſequence and deduction, forbidden in the New Teſtament. Tillotſon.

Her mind was quite alienated from the honeſt Caſtilian, whom ſhe was taught to look upon as a formal old fellow. Aud. Spectat.

ALIENATE. adj. [alienatus, Lat.] Withdrawn from; ſtranger to; with the particle from.

They are moſt damnably wicked, impatient for the death of the queen; ready to gratify their ambition and revenge, by all deſperate methods, wholly alienate from truth, law, religion, mercy, conſcience, or honour. Swift's Miſcellanies.

ALIENA'TION. n. ſ. [alienatio, Lat.]

1. The act of transferring property.

The beginning of this ordinance was for the maintenance of their lands in their poſterity, and for excluding all innovation or alienation thereof unto ſtrangers. Spenſer's State of Ireland.

God put it into the heart of one of our princes, towards the cloſe of her reign, to give a check to that ſacrilege. Her ſucceſſour paſſed a law, which prevented abſolutely all future alienations of the church revenues. Atterbury.

Great changes and alienations of property, have created new and great dependencies. Swift on Athens and Rome.

2. The ſtate of being alienated, as, the eſtate was waſted during its alienation.

3. Change of affection.

It is oft but in dark memory, what the caſe of this perſon was, and what was the ground of his defection, and the alienation of his heart from the king. Bacon's Henry VII.

4. Applied to the mind, it means diſorder of the faculties.

Some things are done by man, though not through outward force and impreſſion, though not againſt, yet without their wills, as in alienation of mind, or any like inevitable abſence of wit and judgment. Hooker, b. 1. p. 23.

ALI'FEROUS. adj. [from ala and fero, Lat.] Having wings. Dict.

ALI'GEROUS. adj. [aliger, Lat.] Having wings, winged. Dict.

To ALI'GGE. v. a. [from a, and lig, to lye down.] To alay, to throw down; to ſubdue. An old word even in the time of Spenſer, now wholly forgotten.

Thomalin, why ſitten we ſo,
As weren overwent with woe,
Upon ſo fair a morrow,
The joyous time now nigheth faſt,
That ſhall aligge this bitter blaſt,
And ſlake the winter ſorrow. Spenſer's Paſtorals.

To ALI'GHT. v. n. [alibtan, Sax. af-achten, Dutch.]

1. To come down, and ſtop. The word implies the idea of deſcending; as, of a bird from the wing, a traveller from his horſe or carriage, and generally of reſting or ſtopping.

There ancient night arriving, did alight
From her high weary waine. Fairy Queen, b. 1. c. v.

There is alighted at your gate
A young Venetian. Shakeſp. Merchant of Venice.

Slackneſs breeds worms, but the ſure traveller,
Though he alight ſometimes, ſtill goeth on. Herbert.

When marching with his foot he walks till night;
When with his horſe he never will alight. Denham.

When Dedalus, to fly the Cretan ſhore,
His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore,
The firſt that fann'd in air, 'tis ſung by Fame,
To the Cumean coaſt at length he came,
And there alighting built this coſtly frame. Dryden's Æneid.

When he was admoniſhed by his ſubject to deſcend, he came down gently and ſoaring in the air, and ſinging to the ground. Like a lark, melodious in her mounting, and continuing her ſong till ſhe alights; ſtill preparing for a higher flight at her next ſally. Dryden.

When finiſh'd was the fight,
The victors from their luſty ſteeds alight,
Like them diſmounted all the warlike train. Dryd. Fables.

Should a ſpirit of ſuperiour rank, a ſtranger to human nature, alight upon the earth, what would his thoughts of us be?

2. It is uſed alſo of any thing thrown or falling, to fall upon.

But ſtorms of ſtones from the proud temple's height,
Pour down, and on our batter'd helms alight.

ALI'KE. adv. [from a and like.] With reſemblance, without difference, in the ſame manner, in the ſame form.

The darkneſs hideth not from thee, but the night ſhineth as the day: the darkneſs and the light are both alike to thee. Pſalm cxxxix. 12.

With thee converſing, I forget all time
All ſeaſons, and their change, all pleaſe alike. Parad. Loſt.

Riches cannot reſcue from the grave,
Which claims alike the monarch and the ſlave. Dryd. Juv.

Let us unite at leaſt in an equal zeal for thoſe capital doctrines, which we all equally embrace, and are alike concerned to maintain. Atterbury's Preface to his Sermons.

Two handmaids wait the throne: alike in place,
But differing far in figure and in face. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

ALIMENT. n. ſ. [alimentum, Lat.] Nouriſhment, that which nouriſhes, nutriment, food.

New parts are added to our ſubſtance; and as we die, we are born daily, nor can we give an account, how the aliment is ſo prepared for nutrition, or by what mechaniſm it is diſtributed.

All bodies which, by the animal faculties, can be changed into the fluids and ſolids of our bodies, are called aliments. But, to take it in the largeſt ſenſe, by aliment, I underſtand every thing which a human creature takes in common diet, as, meat, drink; and ſeaſoning, as, ſalt, ſpice, vinegar, &c. Arbuthnot.

ALIME'NTAL. adj. [from aliment.] That which has the quality of aliment, that which nouriſhes, that which feeds.

The ſun, that light imparts to all, receives
From all his alimental recompenſe,
In humid exhalations. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. v.

Except they be watered from higher regions, theſe weeds muſt loſe their alimental ſap, and wither themſelves.
Brown's Preface to Vulgar Errours.

Th' induſtrious, when the ſun in Leo rides,
And darts his fierceſt beams, portending drought,
Forget not, at the foot of every plant,
To ſink a circling trench, and daily pour
A juſt ſupply of alimental ſtreams,
Exhauſted ſap recruiting. Philips.

ALIMENTARINESS. n. ſ. [from alimentary.] The quality of being alimentary, or of affording nouriſhment. Dict.

ALIMENTARY. adj. [from aliment.]

1. That which belongs or relates to aliment

The ſolution of the aliment by maſtication is neceſſary, without it, the aliment could not be diſpoſed for the charges, which it receives as it paſſeth through the alimentary duct.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. That which has the quality of aliment, or the power of nouriſhing.

I do not think that water ſupplies animals, or even plants, with nouriſhment, but ſerves for a vehicle to the alimentary particles, to convey and diſtribute them to the ſeveral parts of the body. Ray on the Creation.

Of alimentary roots, ſome are pulpy and very nutritious, as, turneps and carrots. Theſe have a fattening quality, which they manifeſt in feeding of cattle. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ALIMENTA'TION. n. ſ. [from aliment.] The power of affording aliment; the quality of nouriſhing.

Plants do nouriſh, inanimate bodies do not: they have an accretion, but no alimentation. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N 54.

ALIMO'NIOUS. adj. [from alimony.] That which nouriſhes: a word very little in uſe.

The plethora renders us lean, by ſuppreſſing our ſpirits, whereby they are incapacitated of digeſting the alimonious humours into fleſh. Harvey on Conſumptions.

ALIMONY. n. ſ. [alimonia, Lat.]

Alimony ſignifies that legal proportion of the huſband's eſtate, which, by the ſentence of the eccleſiaſtical court, is allowed to the wife for her maintenance, upon the account of any separation from him, provided it be not caused by her elopement or adultery. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Before they settled hands and hearts,
Till alimony or death them parts. Hudibras, p. iii. c. iii.

ALIQUANT adj. [aliquantus, Lat.] Parts of a number, which, however repeated, will never make up the number exactly; as, 3 is an aliquant of 10, thrice 3 being 9, four times 3 making 12.

ALIQUOT. adj. [aliquot, Lat.] Aliquot parts of any number or quantity, such as will exactly measure it without any remainder: as, 3 is an aliquot part of 12, because, being taken four times, it will just measure it.

ALISH. adj. [from ale.] Resembling ale, having qualities of ale.

They let it stand five days before they put it into the cask, stirring it and beating down the yeast into it, thus gives it the [illegible]

ALITURE. n. s. [alitura, Lat.] Nourishment. Dict.

ALIVE. adj. [from a and live.]

1. In the state of life; not dead.

Nor well alive, nor wholly dead they were,
But some faint signs of feeble life appear. Dryd. Fables.

Not youthful kings in battle seiz'd alive,
Not scornful virgins who their charms survive. Pope.

2. In a figurative sense, unextinguished; undestroyed; active; in full force.

Those good and learned men had reason to wish, that their proceedings might be favoured, and the good affection of such inclined toward them, kept alive. Hooker, b. v.

3. Chearful; sprightly, full of alacrity.

She was not so much alive the whole day, if she slept more than six hours. Cla

4. In a popular sense, it is used only to add an emphasis, like the French du monde, as, the best man alive, that is, the best, with an emphasis.

And to those brethren said, rise, rise by-and-ye,
And unto battle do yourselves address,
For yonder comes the proweſt knight alive,
Prince Arthur, flower of grace and nobleness. Fairy Queen.

The earl of Northumberland, who was the proudest man alive, could not look upon the destruction of monarchy with any pleasure. Clarendon, b.

John was quick and understood his business very well, but no man alive was more careless in looking into his accounts. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull

ALKAHEST. n. s. A word used first by Paracelsus, and adopted by his followers, to signify an universal dissolvent, or liquour, which has the power of resolving all things into their first principles.

ALKALE'SCENT. adj. [from alkali.] That which has a tendency to the properties of an alkali.

All animal diet is alkalescent or anti-acid. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ALKALI. n. s. [The word alkali comes from an herb, called by the Egyptians kali, by us glasswort.] This herb they burnt to ashes, boiled them in water, and, after having evaporated the water, there remained at the bottom a white salt, this they called sal kali, or alkali. It is corrosive, producing putrefaction in animal substances, to which it is applied. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Any substance, which, when mingled with acids, produces effervescence and fermentation. See ALKALIZATE.

ALKALINE. adj. [from alkali.] That which has the qualities of alkali.

Any watery liquour will keep an animal from starving very long, by diluting the fluids, and consequently keeping them from this alkaline state, which is confirmed by experience, for people have lived twenty-four days upon nothing but water. Arbuthnot upon Aliments.

To ALKALIZATE. v. a. [from alkali.] To make bodies alkaline, by changing their nature, or by mixing alkalies with them.

ALKALIZATE. adj. [from alkali.] That which has the qualities of alkali, that which is impregnated with alkali.

The odour of the fixed nitre is very languid, but that, which it discovers, being dissolved in hot water, is different, being of a kin to that of other alkalizate salts. Boyle.

The colour of violets seems to be of that order, because their syrup, by acid liquours, turns red, and, by urinous and alkalizate, turns green. Newton's Opticks

ALKALIZATION. n. s. [from alkali.] The act of alkalizating, or impregnating bodies with alkali.

ALKANET. n. s. [Anchusa, Lat.] The name of a plant.

This plant is a species of buglosse, with a red root, brought from the southern parts of France, and used in medicine. It will grow in almost any soil, and must be sown in March. Mil.

ALKEKENGI. n. s. A medicinal fruit or berry, produced by a plant of the same denomination; popularly also called winter-cherry, of considerable use as an astringent, dissolvent, and diuretick. The plant bears a near resemblance to Solanum, or Nightshade; whence it is frequently called in Latin by that name, with the addition or epithet of urticarum. Chambers

ALKERMES. n. s. In medicine, a term borrowed from the Arabs, denoting a celebrated remedy, of the form and consistence of a confection; whereof the kermes berries are the base. The other ingredients are pippin-cyder, rose-water, sugar, ambergrease, musk, cinnamon, aloes-wood, pearls, and leaf-gold; but the sweets are usually omitted. The confectio alkermes is chiefly made at Montpelier, which supplies most part of Europe therewith. The grain, which gives it the denomination, is nowhere found so plentifully as there. Chambers.

ALL. adv. [See ALL, adj.]

1. Quite; completely.

How is my love all ready forth to come. Spenser's Epithal.

Know, Rome, that all alone Marcus did fight
Within Corioli gates. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

And swore so loud,
That, all amaz'd, the priest let fall the book. Sh. Tam. Shrew.

They could call a comet a faxed star, which is all one with stella crinita, or comata. Camden's Remains.

For a large conscience is all one,
And signifies the same with none. Hudibras, p. iii. c. i.

Balm, from a silver box distill'd around,
Shall all bedew the roots, and scent the sacred ground. Dryd.

I do not remember he any where mentions expressly the title of the first-born, but all along keeps himself under the shelter of the indefinite term, heir. Locke.

Justice, indeed, may be furnished out of this element, as far as her sword goes, and courage may be all over a continued blaze, if the artist pleases. Addison. Guardian, N° 103.

If e'er the miser durst his farthings spare,
He thinly spreads them through the publick square,
Where, all beside the rail, ragged beggars lie,
And from each other catch the doleful cry. Gay's Trivia.

2. Altogether, wholly; without any other consideration.

I am of the temper of most kings, who love to be in debt, are all for present money, no matter how they pay it afterward. Dryd. Fab. Preface.

3. Only; without admission of any thing else.

When I shall woo,
That lord, whose hand must take my plight, shall carry
Half my love with him, half my care and duty.
Sure I shall never marry, like my sister,
To love my father all. Shakesp. King Lear.

4. Although. This sense is truly Teutonick, but now obsolete.

Do you not think th' accomplishment of it
Sufficient work for one man's simple head,
All were it as the rest but simply writ. Spenser, Son. xxx

5. It is sometimes a word of emphasis; nearly the same with just.

A shepherd's swain, say, did thee bring,
All as his straying flock he fed,
And, when his honour hath thee read,
Crave pardon for thy hardy head. Spenser's Pastorals.

ALL. adj. [Ael, Æa, eale, alle, Sax. oll, Welsh, al, Dutch; alle, Germ. ὅλος, Gr.]

1. The whole number, every one:

Brutus is an honourable man;
So are they all, all honourable men. [Shakesp. Jul. Cæsar.

To graze the herb all leaving,
Devour'd each other. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

The great encouragement of all, is the assurance of a future reward. Tillotson, Sermon v

2. The whole quantity, every part.

Six days thou shalt labour, and do all thy work. Deut.

Political power, I take to be a right of making laws, with penalties, and of employing the force of the community in the execution of such laws, and in the defence of the commonwealth; and all this only for the publick good. Locke.

3. The whole duration of time.

On whose pastures cheerful spring,
All the year doth sit and sing;
And, rejoicing, smiles to see,
Their green backs wear his livery. Ch[illegible]

4. The whole extent of place.

Great [illegible]
any m[illegible]

ALL. n. s.

1. The whole; opposed to part, or nothing.

And will she yet debase her eyes on me;
On me, whose all not equals Edward's moiety?
On me that halt, and am misshapen thus? Shak. Rich. III.

Nought's had, all's spent,
Where our desire is got without content. Shak. Macbeth.

The youth shall study, and no more engage
Their flatt'ring wishes for uncertain age,
No more with fruitless care, and cheated strife,
Chace fleeting pleasure through the maze of life,
Finding the wretched all they here can have,
But present food, and but a future grave. Prior

Our all is at stake, and irretrievably lost, if we fail of success. Addison on the State of the War.

2. Every thing.

Then shall we be news-cramm'd.—All the better, we shall be the more remarkable. Shak. As you like it.

Up with my tent, here will I lie to night;
But where to morrow? Well, all's one for that. Sh. R III.

All the fitter, Lentulus our coming
Is not for salutation, we have business. Ben. Johns. Catiline

That is, every thing is the better, the fame, the fitter

Sceptre and pow'r, thy giving, I assume;
And glad her shall resign, when in the end
Thou shalt be all in all, and I in thee,
For ever, and in me all whom thou lov'st. Parad. Loft.

They all stick to work at the roots of the tree, and left it so little foothold, that the first blast of wind laid it flat upon the ground, nest eagles, and all L'Estrange.

They that do not keep up this indifferency for all but truth, put coloured spectacles before their eyes, and look through false glasses. Locke.

A torch, snuff and all, goes out in a moment, when dipped in the vapour. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

All is much used in composition, but, in most instances, it is merely arbitrary, as, all-commanding. Sometimes the words compounded with it, are fixed and classical; as, Almighty.

When it is connected with a participle, it seems to be a [illegible]s, all-surrounding in other cases, an adverb; as, all-accomplished, or completely accomplished.

Of these compounds, a small part of those which may be found is inserted.

ALL BEARING adj. [from all and bear.] That which bears every thing, omniparous.

Thus while he spoke, the sovereign plant he drew,
Where on th' all-bearing earth unmark'd it grew Pope's Od.

ALL-CHEERING adj. [from all and cheer.] That which gives gayety and cheerfulness to all

Soon as the all-cheering sun
Should, in the farthest east, begin to draw
The shady curtains from Aurora's bed. Sh. Romeo and Jul.

ALL-COMMANDING. adj. [from all and command.] Having the sovereignty over all.

He now sets before them the high and shining idol of glory, the all-commanding image of bright gold. Raleigh's History.

ALL-COMPOSING. adj. [from all and compose.] That which quiets all men, or every thing.

Wrapt in embow'ring shades, Ulysses lies,
His woes forgot! but Pallas now address,
To break the bands of all-composing rest. Pope's Odyssey, b. v.

ALL-CONQUERING. adj. [from all and conquer.] That which subdues every thing.

Second of Satan sprung, all-conquering death!
What thought'st thou of our empire now? Paradise Lost, b. x.

ALL-CONSUMING. adj. [from all and consume.] That which consumes every thing.

By age unbroke but all-consuming care
Destroys perhaps the strength, that time would spare. Pope.

ALL-DEVOURING. adj. [from all and devour.] That which eats up every thing.

Secure from flames, from envy's fiercer rage,
Destructive war, and all-devouring age. Pope's Essay on Crit.

ALL FOURS. n. f. [from all and four.] A low game at cards, played by two, so named from the four particulars by which it is reckoned, and which, joined in the hand of either of the parties, are said to make all fours

ALL HAIL. n. f. [from all, and hail, for health.] All health. This is therefore not a compound, though, perhaps usually reckoned among them.

All hail, ye fields, where constant peace attends!
All hail, ye sacred, solitary groves!
All hail, ye books, my true, my real friends,
Whose conversation pleases and improves. Walsh.

ALL-HALLOWN n. f. [from all and hallow, to make holy.] The time about Allsaintsday

Farewell, thou latter spring! farewell,
All-hallown summer. Shakesp. Henry IV p. 2.

ALLHALLOWTIDE. n. f. [See ALL-HALLOWN.] The time near Allsaints, or the first of November

Cut off the bough about Allhallowtide, in the bare place, and set it in the ground, and it will grow to be a fair tree in one year. Bacon's Natural History, N° 427.

ALL-HEAL. n. f. [Panax, Lat.] A species of ranunculus, which see.

ALL-JUDGING. adj. [from all and judge.] That which has the sovereign right of judgment.

I look with horrour back,
That I detest my wretched self, and curse
My past polluted life. All judging heav'n,
Who knows my crimes, has seen my sorrow for them.
Rowe's Jane Shore.

ALL-KNOWING. adj. [from all and know.] Omniscient, all-wise.

Shall we repine at a little misplaced charity, we, who could no way foresee the effect, when an all-knowing, all-wise Being, showers down every day its benefits on the unthankful and undeserving? Atterbury's Sermons.

ALL-MAKING adj. [from all and make.] That created all; omnifick [See ALL-SEEING.]

ALL POWERFUL. adj. [from all and power.] Almighty, omnipotent, possessed of infinite power.

O all-powerful Being, the least motion of whose will can create or destroy a world, pity us, the mournful friends of thy oppressed servant. Sandys.

ALL SAINTS DAY. n. f. The day on which there is a general celebration of the saints. The first of November

ALL SEER. n. f. [from all and see.] He that sees or beholds every [illegible] whose view comprehends all things.

[illegible]igh All-seer, which I dashed with,
Hurl'st my feigned prayer on my head,
And giv'n in earnest, what I begg'd in jest. Shak. Rich. III.

ALL-SEEING. adj. [from all and see.] That beholds every thing.

The same First Mover certain bounds has plac'd,
How long those perishable forms shall last,
Nor can they last beyond the time assign'd
By that all-seeing and all-making mind. Dryd. Fables.

ALL SOULS DAY. n. f. The day on which supplications are made for all souls by the church of Rome, the second of November.

This is all souls day, fellows, [illegible]
It is, my lord.—
Why then, all souls day is my body's doomsday Shak. R III.

ALL-SUFFICIENT. adj. [from all and sufficient.] Sufficient to every thing.

The testimonies of God are perfect, the testimonies of God are all-sufficient unto that end for which they were given Hooker.

He can more than employ all our powers in their utmost extension, for he is every way perfect and all-sufficient. Norris.

ALL-WISE. adj. [from all and wise.] Possest of infinite wisdom.

There is an infinite, eternal, all-wise Mind governing the affairs of the world South.

Supreme, all-wise, eternal, potentate!
Sole author, sole disposer of our fate! Prior.

ALLANTOIS, or ALLANTOIDES. n. f. [from ἀλλᾶς, a gut, and εἶδος, shape.] The urinary tunick placed between the amnion and chorion, which, by the navel and urachus, or passage by which the urine is conveyed from the infant in the womb, receives the urine that comes out of the blood.

TO ALLAY. v. a. [from aloyer, Fr. to mix one metal with another in order to coinage, it is therefore derived by some from a la loi, according to law, the quantity of metals being mixed according to law, by others, from aller, to unite; perhaps from alligare, to put together.]

1. To mix one metal with another, to make it fitter for coinage. In this sense, most authours preserve the original French orthography, and write alloy. See ALLOY
2. To join any thing to another, so as to abate its predominant qualities.

Being brought into the open air,
I would allay the burning quality
Of that fell poison. Shakesp. King John.

No friendly offices shall alter or allay that rancour, that frets in some hellish breasts, which, upon all occasions, will foam out at its foul mouth in slander and invective. South.

3. To quiet, to pacify, to repress. The word, in this sense, I think not to be derived from the French aloyer, but to be the English word lay, with a before it, according to the old form.

If, by your art, you have Put the wild waters in this roar, allay them. Shak. Tempest.

ALLAY. n. f. [aloy, Fr.]

1. The metal of a baser kind mixed in coins, to harden them, that they may wear less. Gold is alayed with silver and copper, two carats to a pound Troy; silver with copper only, of which eighteen pennyweight is mixed with a pound. Cowel thinks the alay is added, to countervail the charge of coining; which might have been done only by making the coin less.

For fools are stubborn in their way,
As coins are harden'd by th' allay. Hudibras, p. iii. c. 2.

2. Any thing which, being added, abates the predominant qualities of that with which it is mingled; in the same manner, as the admixture of baser metals alay the qualities of the first mass.

Dark colours easily suffer a sensible allay, by little scattering light. Newton's Opticks

3. Alay being taken from baser metals, commonly implies something worse than that with which it is mixed

The joy has no allay of jealousy, hope and fear Roscommon.

ALLAYER. n. f. [from allay.] The person or thing which has the power or quality of allaying.

Phlegm and pure blood are reputed allayers of acrimony; and, upon that account, Avicen countermands letting blood in cholerick bodies, because he esteems the blood a fraenum bilis, or a bridle of gall, obtunding its acrimony and fervescency. Harvey on Consumptions.

ALLAYMENT. n. f. [from allay.] That which has the power of allaying or abating the force of another

If I could temporize with my affection,
Or brew it to a weak and colder palate,
The like allayment would I give my grief. Sh. Troilus and Cr.

ALLEGATION. n. f. [from allege.]

1. Affirmation; declaration
2. The thing alleged or affirmed.

Hath he not twit our sovereign lady here
With ignominious words, though darkly couch't?

As if he had ſuborned ſome to ſwear
Falſe allegations, to o'erthrow his ſtate. Shakeſp. Henry VI.

3. An excuſe, a plea.

I omitted no means in my power, to be informed of my errours, and I expect not to be excuſed in any negligence on account of youth, want of leiſure, or any other idle allegations.
Pope's Preface to his Works.

To ALLE'GE. v. a. [allego, Lat.]

1. To affirm; to declare; to maintain.
2. To plead as an excuſe, or produce as an argument.

Surely the preſent form of church-government is ſuch, as no law of God, or reaſon of man, hath hitherto been alleged, of force ſufficient to prove they do ill, who, to the utmoſt of their power, withſtand the alteration thereof. Hooker's Preface.

If we forſake the ways of grace or goodneſs, we cannot allege any colour of ignorance, or want of inſtruction; we cannot ſay we have not learned them, or we could not. Sprat.

He hath a clear and full view, and there is no more to be alleged for his better information. Locke.

ALLE'GEABLE. adj. [from allege.] That which may be alleged.

Upon this interpretation all may be ſolved, that is allegeable againſt it. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 7.

ALLE'GEMENT. n. ſ. [from allege.] The ſame with allegation. D.

ALLE'GER. n. ſ. [from allege.] He that alleges.

Which narrative, if we may believe it as confidently as the famous alleger of the Pamphilii, appears to do, would ſeem to argue, that there is, ſometimes, no other principle requiſite, than what may reſult from the lucky mixture of the parts of ſeveral bodies. Boyle.

ALLE'GIANCE. n. ſ. [allegeance, Fr.] The duty of ſubjects to the government.

I did pluck allegiance from mens hearts,
Loud ſhouts and ſalutations from their mouths,
Even in the preſence of the crowned king. Shak. Henry IV.

We charge you on allegiance to ourſelves,
To hold your ſlaught'ring hands, and keep the peace.
Shakeſpeare's Henry VI. p.

The houſe of commons, to whom every day petitions are directed by the ſeveral counties of England, profeſſing all allegiance to them, govern abſolutely, the lords concurring, or rather ſubmitting to whatſoever is propoſed. Clarendon.

ALLE'GIANT. adj. [from allege.] Loyal; conformable to the duty of allegiance: a word not now uſed.

For your great graces
Heap'd upon me, poor undeſerver, I
Can nothing render but allegiant thanks,
My pray'rs to heav'n for you. Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

ALLEGO'RICK. adj. [from allegory.] After the manner of an allegory, not real; not literal.

A kingdom they portend thee; but what kingdom,
Real or allegorick, I diſcern not. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. iv.

ALLEGO'RICAL. adj. [from allegory.] In the form of an allegory, not real; not literal; mythical.

To ALLEVIATE. v. a. [alevo, Lat.]

1. To make light, to eaſe, to ſoften.

Moſt of the diſtempers are the effects of abuſed plenty and luxury, and muſt not be charged upon our Maker, who, notwithſtanding, hath provided excellent medicines, to alleviate thoſe evils which we bring upon ourſelves. Bentley's Sermons.

2. To extenuate, or ſoften, as, he alleviates his fault by an excuſe.

ALLEVIATION. n. ſ. [from alleviate.]

1. The act of making light, of allaying, or extenuating.

All apologies for, and alleviations of faults, though they are the heights of humanity, yet they are not the favours, but the duties of friendſhip. South's Sermons.

2. That by which any pain is eaſed, or fault extenuated.

This loſs of one fifth of their debts and income will ſit heavy on them, who ſhall ſee it, without the alleviation of any profit. Locke.

ALLEY. n. ſ. [allée, Fr.]

1. A walk in a garden.

And all within were walks and alleys wide,
With footing worn, and leading inward far. Fairy Queen.

It is common from experience, that where alleys are cloſe gravelled, the earth putteth forth the firſt year knotgraſs, and after ſpiregraſs. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 565.

Yonder alleys green,
Our walk at noon, with branches overgrown. Parad. Loſt.

Come, my fair love, our morning's taſk we loſe;
Some labour ev'n the cabbet life would chooſe.
Ours is not great: the dangling bows to crop,
Whoſe too luxuriant growth our alleys ſtop. Dryden.

The thriving plants, ignoble broomſticks made,
Now ſweep thoſe alleys they were born to ſhade. Pope.

2. A paſſage in towns narrower than a ſtreet.

A back friend, a ſhoulder clapper, one that commands
The paſſages of alleys, creeks, and narrow lands.
Shakeſp. Comedy of Errours.

ALLI'ANCE. n. ſ. [alliance, Fr.]

1. The ſtate of connection with another by confederacy; a league. In this ſenſe, our hiſtories of Queen Anne mention the grand alliance.
2. Relation by marriage.

A bloody Hymen ſhall th' alliance join
Betwixt the Trojan and th' Ausonian line. Dryden's Æneid.

3. Relation by any form of kindred.

For my father's ſake,
In honour of a true Plantagenet,
And, for alliance' ſake, declare the cauſe
My father loſt his head. Shakeſp. Henry VI. p. i.

4. The act of forming or contracting relation to another, the act of making a confederacy.

Dorſet, your ſon, that with a fearful ſoul
Leads diſcontented ſteps in foreign ſoil,
This fair alliance quickly ſhall call home
To high promotions. Shakeſp. Richard III.

Adraſtus ſoon, with gods averſe, ſhall join
In dire alliance with the Theban line,
Thence ſtrife ſhall riſe, and mortal war ſucceed. Pope.

5. The perſons allied to each other.

I would not boaſt the greatneſs of my father,
But point out new alliances to Cato. Addiſon's Cato.

ALLI'CIENCY. n. ſ. [alicio, Lat. to entice or draw.] The power of attracting any thing, magnetiſm, attraction.

ALLO'DIUM. n. f. [A word of very uncertain derivation, but moſt probably of German original.]

A poſſeſſion held in abſolute independence, without any acknowledgment of a lord paramount. It is oppoſed to fee, or feudum, which intimates ſome kind of dependance. There are no allodial lands in England, all being held either mediately or immediately of the king

ALLO'NGE. n. f. [allonge, Fr.] A paſs or thruſt w th a rapier, ſo called from the lengthen ng of the ſpace taken up by the fencer.

To ALLO'O. v. a. [This word is generally ſpoke halloo, and is uſed to dogs, when they are incited to the chaſe or battle; it is commonly imag ned to come from the French allons, perhaps from all lo, look all; ſhewing the object.] To ſet on; to incite a dog, by crying allo.

Allo thy furious maſtiff, bid him vex
The noxious herd, and print upon their ears
A laſt memorial of their paſt offence. Philips.

ALLOQUY. n. f. [alloquium, Lat.] The act of ſpeaking to another; converſe; converſation. Dict.

To ALLOT. v. a. [from lot.]

1. To diſtribute by lot.
2. To grant.

Five days we do allot thee for proviſion,
To ſhield thee from diſaſters of the world,
And, on the ſixth, to turn thy hated back
Upon our kingdom. Shakeſp. King Lear.

I ſhall deſerve my fate, if I refuſe
That happy hour, which heaven allots to peace. Dryden.

3. To diſtribute; to parcel out; to give each his ſhare.

Since fame was the only end of all their new enterprizes and ſtudies, a man cannot be too ſcrupulous in allotting them the due portion of it. Tatler, N° 81

ALLOTMENT. n. f. [from allot.] That which is allotted to any one; the part, the ſhare, the portion granted.

There can be no thought of ſecurity or quiet in this world, but in a reſignation to the allotments of God and nature. L'Eſtr.

Though it is our duty to ſubmit with patience to more ſcanty allotments, yet thus much we may reaſonably and lawfully aſk of God. Rogers's Sermons.

ALLO'TTERY n. f. [from allot.] That which is granted to a particular perſon in a diſtribution. See ALLOTMENT

Allow me ſuch exerciſes as may become a gentleman, or give me the poor allottery my father left me by teſtament.
Shakeſpeare, As you it

To ALLOW. v. a. [allouer, Fr. from allaudare.]

1. To admit; as, to allow a poſition, not to contradict; not to oppoſe.

The principles, which all mankind allow for true, are innate; thoſe, that men of right reaſon admit, are the principles allowed by all mankind. Locke.

The pow'r of muſick all our hearts allow;
And what Timotheus was, is Dryden now. Pope's Eſſ. Crit.

As to what is alleged, that ſome of the Preſbyterians declared openly againſt the king's murder, I allow it to be true. Swift.

2. To grant; to yield; to own any one's title to.

We will not, in civility, allow too much ſincerity to the profeſſions of moſt men; but think their actions to be interpreters of their thoughts. Locke.

I will heap you to enough of them, and ſhall be ready to allow the pope as little power here as you pleaſe. Swift.

3. To grant licence to; to permit.

Let's follow the old earl, and get the bedlam
To lead him where he would; his roguiſh madneſs
Allows itſelf to any thing. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

But as we were allowed of God to be put in truſt with the goſpel, even ſo we ſpeak, not as pleaſing men, but God, which trieth our hearts. 1 Theſſ. ii. 4.

They referred all laws, that were to be paſſed in Ireland, to be conſidered, corrected and allowed firſt by the ſtate of England. Davies on Ireland.

4. To give a ſanction to, to authorize.

There is no character in an allow'd fool. Shakeſp. Tw. Night.

5. To give to; to pay to.

Ungrateful then! if we no tears allow
To him that gave us peace and empire too. Waller.

6. To appoint for, to ſet out to a certain uſe, as, he allowed his ſon the third part of his revenue.

7. To make a ſtatement, or proviſion; or to ſettle any thing, with ſome conceſſions or cautions, regarding ſomething elſe.

If we conſider the different occaſions of ancient and modern medals, we ſhall find they both agree in recording the great actions and ſucceſſes in war; allowing ſtill for the different ways of making it, and the circumſtances that attended it.

ALLOWABLE adj. [from allow.]

1. That which may be admitted without contradiction.

It is not allowable, what is obſerved in many pieces of Raphael, where Magdalen is repreſented, before our Saviour, waſhing his feet, on her knees, which will not conſiſt with the text. Brown's Vulgar Errours

2. That which is permitted or licenſed, lawful, not forbidden.

In actions of this ſort, the very light of nature alone may diſcover that which is ſo far forth in the ſight of God allowable. Hooker, b. i. § 8.

I was, by the freedom allowable among friends, tempted to vent my thoughts with negligence. Boyle on the Scriptures

Reputation becomes a ſignal and a very peculiar bleſſing to magiſtrates, and their purſuit of it is not only allowable, but [illegible]

ALLOWABLENESS. n. f. [from allowable.] The quality of being allowable, lawfulneſs, exemption from proh bition

I cannot think myſelf engaged to diſcourſe of love, as to the nature, uſe, and allowableneſs, in matters of recreation, what is indeed impugned by ſome, though better defended by others. South's Sermons.

ALLOWANCE. n. f. [from allow.]

1. Admiſſion without contradiction.

Without the notion and [illegible]
will be lame and defective Locke.

2. Sanction; licence, authority

That which wiſdom did firſt begin, and hath been with good men long continued, challengeth allowance of them that ſucceed, although it plead for itſelf nothing Hooker, b. v. § 7.

You ſent a large commiſſion
To Gregory de Caſſado, to conclude,
Without the king's will, or the ſtate's allowance,
A league between his highneſs and Ferrara. Shak. Henry VIII.

3. Permiſſion, freedom from reſtraint.

They ſhould therefore be accuſtomed betimes to conſult and make uſe of their reaſon, before they give allowance to their inclinations. Locke.

4. A ſettled rate; or appointment for any uſe.

The victuals in plantations ought to be expended almoſt as in a beſieged town, that is, with certain allowance. Bacon.

And his allowance was a continual allowance given him of the king; a daily rate for every day all his life. 2 Kings, xxv. 30.

5. Abatement from the ſtrict rigour of a law, or demand.

The whole poem, though written in that which they call heroick verſe, is of the Pindarick nature, as well in the thought as the expreſſion; and, as ſuch, requires the ſame grains of allowance for it. Dryden.

Parents never give allowances for an innocent paſſion. Swift.

6. Eſtabliſhed character; reputation.

His bark is ſtoutly timber'd, and his pilot
Of very expert and approved allowance,
Therefore my hopes, not ſurfeited to death,
Stand in bold awe. Shakeſp. Othello.

ALLOY. n. f. [See ALLAY]

1. Baſer metal mixed in coinage.

That preciſe weight and fineneſs, by law appropriated to the pieces of each denomination, is called the ſtandard. Fine ſilver is ſilver without the mixture of any baſer metal. Alloy is baſer metal mixed with it. Locke.

For let another piece be coined of the ſame weight, wherein half the ſilver is taken out, and copper, or other alloy, put into the place, every one knows it will be worth but half as much, for the value of the alloy is ſo inconſiderable as not to be reckoned. Locke.

2. Abatement; diminution.

The pleaſures of ſenſe are probably reliſhed by beaſts in a more exquiſite degree, than they are by men; for they taſte them ſincere and pure always, without mixture or alloy.
Atterbury's Sermons.

ALLUBESCENCY. n. f. [allubeſcentia, Lat.] Willingneſs; conſent. Dict.

To ALLUDE. v. n. [alludo, Lat.] To have ſome reference to a thing, without the direct mention of it; to hint at; to inſinuate. It is uſed of perſons, as, he alludes to an old ſtory, or of things, as, the ſimile alludes to his manner's ſtatues

Theſe ſpeeches of Jerom and Chryſoſtom do ſeem plainly to allude unto ſuch miniſterial garments as were then in uſe.
Hooker, b. v. § 29.

True it is, that many things of this nature be alluded unto, yea, many things declared. Hooker, b. v. § 2.

Their juſt proportions were taken, and every thing placed by weight and meaſure; and this I doubt not was that architecture here alluded to. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

[illegible]
paint upon paper or parchment, becauſe it gives graces, and not an ornament, to the letters or figures coloured Cowel.

To ALLURE. v. a. [leurre, Fr loeren, Dutch, belæpen, Sax.] To entice to any thing whether good or bad; to draw towards any thing by enticement.

Unto laws that men make for the benefit of men, it hath seemed always needful to add rewards, which may more allure unto good, than any hardness deterreth from it, and punishments, which may more deter from evil, than any sweetness thereto alloreth. Hooker, b. i. p. 28.

Above them all
The golded sun, in splendour likest heav'n,
Allur'd his eye. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii. l. 572.

Each flatt'ring hope, and each allur'ing joy. Lyttleton.

ALLU'RE. n. s. [from the verb allure.] Something set up to entice birds, or other things, to it. We now write lure.

The rather to train them to his allure, he told them both often, and with a vehement voice, how they were over-topped and trodden down by gentlemen. Sir John Hayward.

ALLU'REMENT. n. s. [from allure.]

That which allures, or has the force of alluring; enticement; temptation of pleasure.

Against allurement, custom, and a world
Offended; fearless of reproach, and scorn,
Or violence. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi

——Adam, by his wife's allurement, fell. Par. Reg. b. ii

To shun th' allurement is not hard
To minds resolv'd, forewarn'd, and well prepar'd;
But wond'rous difficult, when once beset,
To struggle through the straits, and break th' involving net.
Dryden.

ALLU'RER. n. s. [from allure.] The person that allures, enticer; enveigler.

ALLU'RINGLY. adv. [from allure.] In an alluring manner; enticingly.

ALLU'RINGNESS. n. s. [from alluring.] The quality of alluring or enticing; incitation; temptation by propoling pleasure.

ALLUSION. n. s. [allusio, Lat.] That which is spoken with reference to something supposed to be already known, and therefore not expressed; a hint, an implication. It has the particle to.

Here are manifest allusions and footsteps of the dissolution of the earth, as it was in the deluge, and will be in the last ruin.
Burnet's Theory.

This last allusion gall'd the Panther more,
Because indeed it rubb'd upon the sore. Dryden.

Expressions now out of use, allusions to customs lost to us, and various particularities, must needs continue several passages in the dark. Locke's Essay on St. Paul's Epistles.

ALLU'SIVE. adj. [alludo, allusum, Lat.] Hinting at something not fully expressed.

Where the expression in one place is plain, and the sense affixed to it agreeable to the proper force of the words, and no negative objection requires us to depart from it, and the expression, in the other, is figurative or allusive and the doctrine, deduced from it, liable to great objections; it is reasonable, in this latter place, to restrain the extent of the figure and allusion, to a consistency with the former. Rogers's Sermons.

ALLU'SIVELY. adv. [from allusive.] In an allusive manner; by implication, by insinuation.

The Jewish nation, that rejected and crucified him, within the compass of one generation, were, according to his prediction, destroyed by the Romans, and preyed upon by those eagles, (Matt. xxiv. 28) by which, allusively, are noted the Roman armies, whose ensign was the eagle. Hammond's Pr. Cat.

ALLU'SIVENESS. n. s. [from allusive.] The quality of being allusive.

ALLU'VION. n. s. [alluvio, Lat.]

1. The carrying of any thing to something else by the motion of the water.
2. The thing carried by water to something else.

The civil law gives the owner of land a right to that increase which arises from alluvion, which is defined an insensible increment, brought by the water.

ALLU'VIOUS. adj. [from alluvion.] That which is carried by water to another place, and lodged upon something else.

To ALLY. v. a. [allier, Fr.]

1. To unite by kindred, friendship, or confederacy.

All these septs are allied to the inhabitants of the North, so as there is no hope that they will ever serve faithfully against them. Spenser on Ireland.

Wants, frailties, passions, closer still ally
The common int'rest, or endear the tye. Pope's Ess. on Man.

To the sun ally'd,
From him they draw the animating fire. Thomson's Summer.

2. To make a relation between two things, by similitude, or resemblance, or any other means.

Two lines I cannot excuse they are indeed remotely allied to Virgil's sense, but they are too like the tenderness of Ovid. Dryden.

ALLY. n. s. [allié, Fr.] One united by some means of connexion; as marriage, friendship, confederacy.

We could hinder the accession of Holland to France, either as subjects, with great immunities for the encouragement of trade, or as an inferiour and dependent ally under their protection. Temple.

ALMACANTAR. n. s. [An Arabick word, written variously by various authours, by D'Herbelot, almucantur; by others, almucantar.] A circle drawn parallel to the horizon. It is generally used in the plural, and means a series of parallel circles drawn through the several degrees of the meridian.

ALMACA'NTAR'S STAFF. n. s. An instrument commonly made of pear-tree or box, with an arch of fifteen degrees, used to take observations of the sun, about the time of its rising and setting, in order to find the amplitude, and consequently the variation of the compass. Chambers.

ALMANACK. n. s. [Derived, by some, from the Arabick, al, and manah, Heb. to count, or compute; but others, from al, Arabick, and μὴν, a month, or μηνιακὸς, the course of the months; by others, from a Teutonick original, al and maan, the moon, an account of every moon, or month. all of them are probable.]

A calendar; a book in which the revolutions of the seasons, with the return of feasts and fasts, is noted for the ensuing year.

It will be said, this is an almanack for the old year; all hath been well; Spain hath not assailed this kingdom. Bacon.

This astrologer made his almanack give a tolerable account of the weather, by a direct inversion of the common prognostications. Government of the Tongue.

Beware the woman too, and shun her sight,
Who in these studies does herself delight;
By whom a greasy almanack is born,
With often handling like chaft amber worn. Dryd. Juvenal.

I'll have a fasting almanack printed on purpose for her use.
Dryden's Spanish Friar.

ALMANDINE. n. s. [Fr. almandina, Ital.] A ruby coarser and lighter than the oriental, and nearer the colour of the granate. Ld.

ALMIGHTINESS. n. s. [from almighty.] Unlimited power, omnipotence; one of the attributes of God.

It serveth to the world for a witness of his almightiness, whom we outwardly honour with the chiefest of outward things.
Hooker, b. v. § 15.

In creating and making existent the world universal, by the absolute act of his own word, his power and almightiness
Sir Walter Raleigh.

In the wilderness, the bittern and the stork, the unicorn and the elk, live upon his provisions, and revere his power, and feel the force of his almightiness. Taylor's Rule of holy living

ALMI'GHTY. adj. [from all and mighty.] Of unlimited power; omnipotent.

The Lord appeared unto Abram, and said unto him, I am the almighty God; walk before me, and be thou perfect.
Genesis, xvii. 1.

He wills you in the name of God almighty,
That you divest yourself, and lay apart
The borrow'd glories, that, by gift of heav'n,
By law of nature and of nations 'long
To him and to his heirs. Shakespeare's Henry V.

A'LMOND. n. s. [amand, Fr. derived by Menage from amandala, a word in low Latin; by others, from Allemand, a German, supposing that almonds come to France from Germany.]

The nut of the almond tree, either sweet or bitter

Pound an almond, and the clear white colour will be altered into a dirty one, and the sweet taste into an oily one. Locke.

ALMOND TREE. n. s. [amygdalus, Lat.]

It has leaves and flowers very like those of the peach tree, but the fruit is longer and more compressed, the outer green coat is thinner and drier when ripe, and the shell is not so rugged

The species are, 1. The common large almond. 2. The sweet almond, with tender shells. 3. The bitter almond. 4. The white flowering almond.

The three first sorts are chiefly cultivated in England, for the beauty of their flowers; and the first sort yields large quantities of fruit yearly, little inferiour to what we receive from abroad, if not kept too long. They are propagated in July, by inoculating a bud into a plum stock, for wet ground, or an almond or peach stock for dry. The fourth is a greater curiosity; it will not succeed on a plum, but must be budded on a peach or almond. Miller.

Like to an almond tree, you're mounted high
On top of green Selinis, all alone,
With blossoms brave bedecked daintily,
Whose tender locks do tremble every one,
At every little breath that under heav'n is blown. Fairy Q.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood,
If odrous blooms the bearing branches load,
The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign;
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

ALMONDS OF THE THROAT, or TONSILS, called improperly almonds of the ears; are two round glands placed on the sides of the basis of the tongue, under the common membrane of the fauces, each of them has a large oval sinus, which opens into the fauces, and in it are a great number of lesser ones, which discharge themselves through the great sinus of a mucous and slippery matter into the fauces, larynx, and œsophagus, for the moistening and lubricating those parts. When the œsophagus muscle acts, it compresses the almonds, and they frequently are the occasion of a sore throat. Quincy

The tonsils, or Almonds of the Ears, are also frequently swelled in the king's evil, which tumour may be very well reckoned a species of it. Wiseman's Surgery.

A MOND-FURNACE, or A'LMAN-FURNACE, called also the Stoop, is a peculiar kind of furnace used in refining, to separate metals from cinders and other foreign substances. Chambers.

A'LMONER, or ALMNER. n. f. [eleemosynarius, Lat.] The officer of a prince, or other person, employed in the distribution of charity.

I enquired among the Jacobins for an almoner; and the general fame has pointed out your reverence as the worthiest man. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

A'LMONRY. n. f. [from almoner.] The place where the almoner resides, or where the alms are distributed.

ALMOST. adv. [from all and most, that is, most part of all. Skinner.] Nearly; well nigh; in the next degree to the whole or to universality.

Who is there almost, whose mind, at some time or other, love or anger, fear or grief, has not so fastened to some clog, that it could not turn itself to any other object. Locke.

There can be no such thing or notion, as an almost infinite, there can be nothing next or second to an omnipotent God. Bentley's Sermons.

Atlas becomes unequal to his freight,
And almost faints beneath the glowing weight. Addis. Ovid.

ALMS. n. f. [in Saxon, elmer, from eleemosyna, Lat.] What is given gratuitously in relief of the poor. It has no singular.

My arm'd knees,
Which bow'd but in my stirrup, bend like his
That hath received an alms. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

The poor beggar hath a just demand of an alms from the rich man; who is guilty of fraud, injustice and oppression, if he does not afford relief according to his abilities. South.

ALMS-BASKET. n. f. [from alms and basket.] The basket in which provisions are put to be given away.

These sweepings do as well,
As the best order'd meal;
For who the relish of these guests will fit,
Needs set them but the alms-basket of wit. Ben. Johnson.

We'll stand up for our properties, was the beggar's motto that lived upon the alms-basket. L'Estrange's Fables.

ALMSDEED. n. f. [from alms and deed.] An act of charity; a charitable gift.

This woman was full of good works, and almsdeeds which she did. Acts, ix. 36.

Hard favour'd Richard, where art thou?
Thou art not here: murder is thy almsdeed;
Petitioner for blood thou ne'er put'st back.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

ALMS-GIVER. n. f. [from alms and giver.] He that gives alms; he that supports others by his charity.

He built and endowed many religious foundations, besides his memorable hospital of the Savoy. And yet was he a great alms-giver in secret, which shewed that his works in publick were dedicated rather to God's glory than his own. Bacon.

ALMSHOUSE. n. f. [from alms and house.] A house devoted to the reception and support of the poor; an hospital for the poor.

The way of providing for the clergy by tithes, the device of almshouses for the poor, and the sorting out of the people into their several parishes, are manifest unto men of understanding. Hooker's Preface.

And to relief of lazars, and weak age
Of indigent faint souls, past corporal toil,
A hundred almshouses right well supplied. Shakesp. Henry V.

Many penitents, after the robbing of temples, and other violences of rapine, build an hospital, or some alms-house, out of the ruins of the church, and the spoils of widows and orphans. L'Estrange's Fables.

Behold yon almshouse, neat, but void of state,
Where age and want sit smiling at the gate. Pope.

ALMSMAN. n. f. [from alms and man.] A man who lives upon alms; who is supported by charity.

I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,
My gorgeous palace, for a hermitage,
My gay apparel for an almsman's gown. Shakesp. Rich. II.

A'LMUG-TREE. n. f. A tree mentioned in scripture.

Of its wood were made musical instruments, and it was used also in rails, or in a staircase. The Rabbins generally render it coral, others ebony, brasil, or pine. In the Septuagint it is translated straight wood, and in the Vulgate, Ligna Thyina. But coral could never answer the purposes of the almug-tree; the pine-tree is too common in Judea to be imported from Ophir, and the Thyinum, or citron-tree, much esteemed by the ancients for its fragrance and beauty, came from Mauritania. By the wood almugim, or algumim, or, simply, gummim, taking al for a kind of article, may be understood oily and gummy sorts of wood, and particularly the trees which produce gum ammoniac, or gum arabick, and is, perhaps, the same with the Shittim wood mentioned by Moses. Calmet.

And the navy also of Hiram that brought gold from Ophir, brought in from Ophir great plenty of almug-trees and precious trees. 1 Kings, x. 11.

ALNAGAR, A'LNAGER, or A'LNEGER. n. f. [from alnage.]

A measurer by the ell, a sworn officer, whose business formerly was to inspect the assize of woollen cloth, and to fix the seals appointed upon it for that purpose; but there are now three officers belonging to the regulation of cloth-manufactures, the searcher, measurer, and alneger. Dict.

ALNAGE. n. f. [from aunage, or aunage, Fr.] Ell-measure, or rather the measuring by the ell or yard. Dict.

A'LNIGHT. n. f. [from all and night.]

There is a service which they call alnight, which is a great cake of wax, with the wick in the midst; whereby it cometh to pass, that the wick fetcheth the nourishment farther off. Bacon's Natural History, N° 372.

A'LOES. n. f. [אהלים, as it is supposed.] A term applied to three different things.

1. A precious wood used, in the East, for perfumes, of which the best sort is of higher price than gold, and was the most valuable present given by the king of Siam, in 1686, to the king of France. It is called Tambac, and is the heart, or innermost part, of the aloetree, the next part to which is called Calembac, which is sometimes imported into Europe, and, though of inferiour value to the Tambac, is much esteemed. The part next the bark is termed, by the Portuguese, Pao d'aquila, or eagle-wood; but some account the eagle-wood not the outer part of the Tambac, but another species. Our knowledge of this wood is yet very imperfect. Savary.

2. Aloes is a tree which grows in hot countries, and even in the mountains of Spain.

The leaves are thick, succulent, and generally beset with spines on the edges; the flower consists of one leaf, is tubulous, and cut into six segments at the top, like the hyacinth; the fruit is oblong and cylindrical, divided into three cells, containing flat, and, for the most part, semicircular seeds.

The species are 39; 1. The common large American aloe. 2. The narrow-leaved aloe, from Vera Cruz. 3. The American aloe, which produces young plants out of the flower stems, &c.

Many of these plants, in English gardens, are natives of the East and West Indies; but the most curious are brought from the Cape of Good Hope.

The first of these aloes is very hardy, and has endured the air, in mild winters, in a very dry soil, and under a south wall, but they may be kept in a common greenhouse, giving them very little moisture in winter. The other sorts are preserved in an airy glass-case, with a stove. The aloes are all increased by offsets.

Most of the African species, after the second, third, or fourth year's growth, produce flowers with us annually; but the American aloes flower but once during the life of the plant, producing the flower-stems from the centre of the plant, of a considerable size, and sometimes fifteen feet in height.

A common error, relating to the first species, is, that it never flowers till it be an hundred years old, but experience has proved, that some have flowered in fifty years. Another error is, that, when the flower opens, it makes a report like a gun. Miller.

3. Aloes is a medicinal juice extracted not from the odoriferous, but the common aloes tree, by cutting the leaves, and exposing the juice that drops from them to the sun. It is distinguished into Socotorine and and Caballine, or horse aloes; the first is so called from Socotora, the second, because, being coarser, it ought to be confined to the use of farriers. It is a warm and strong cathartick, and used in most purgative compositions.

ALOE'TICAL. adj. [from aloes.] Consisting chiefly of aloes.

It may be excited by aloetical, scammonate, or acrimonious medicines. Wiseman's Surgery.

ALOE'TICK. n. f. [from aloes.] Any medicine is so called, which chiefly consists of aloes.

ALOFT. adv. [loffter, to lift up, Dan. Loft air, Isl. Lopt air, into the air.] On high; above, in the air; a word used chiefly in poetry.

For I have read in stories oft,
That love has wings, and soars aloft. Suckling.

Upright he stood, and bore aloft his shield,
Conspicuous from afar, and overlook'd the field. Dryd. Fab.

ALOFT. prep. Above.

The great luminary
Aloft the vulgar constellations thick,
That from his lordly eye keep distance due,
Dispenses light from far. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. .

A'LOGY. n. f. [ἀλογία.] Unreasonableness; absurdity. Dict.

ALONE. adj. [allein, Dutch, from al and ein, or one, that is, single.] Single without another.

The quarrel toucheth none but us alone,
Betwixt ourselves let us decide it then. Shakesp. Henry VI.

If by a mortal hand my father's throne
Could be defended, 'twas by mine alone. Dryden, Æneid.

God, by whose alone power and conservation, we all live, and move, and have our being. Bentley.

2. Without company, solitary.

Eagles we see fly alone, and they are but sheep which always herd together. Sidney, b. .

Alone, for other creature in this place
Living, or lifeless, to be found was none. Paradise Lost
I never durst in darkness be alone. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

ALO'NE. adv.

1. This word is seldom used but with the word let, if even then it be an adverb, and implies sometimes an ironical prohibition, to help a man who is able to manage the affair himself

Let us alone to guard Corioli;
If they set down before's, 'fore they remove,
Bring up your army. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Let you alone, cunning artificer
See how his gorget peers above his gown,
To tell the people in what danger he was. Ben. Johns. Catil.

2. To let alone, to forbear; to leave unfinished

His client stole it, but he had better have let it alone, for he lost his cause by his jest. Addison. Spectator, N° 408

ALO'NG. adv. [au long, Fr.]

1. At length.

Or the black water of Pomptina stands. Dryd. Æneid

3. Throughout, in the whole, with all prefixed.

They were all along a cross, untoward sort of people. South.
Solomon, all along in his Proverbs, gives the title of fool to a wicked man Tillotson.

4. Joined with the particle with, in company, joined with.

If your commotion will forthwith dispatch,
And he to England shall along with you. Shakesp. Hamlet.
Hence then! and Evil go with thee along,
Thy offspring, to the place of evil, Hell;
Thou and thy wicked crew! Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
Religious zeal is subject to an excess, and to a defect, when something is mingled with it, which it should not have, or when it wants something that ought to go along with it. Sprat.

5. Sometimes with is understood.

Command thy slaves, my free-born soul disdains
A tyrant's curb; and restive breaks the reins.
Take this along, and no dispute shall rise
(Though mine the woman) for my ravish'd prize. Dryden.

6. Forward, onward. In this sense it is derived from allons, French

Come then, my friend, my genius, come along,
Thou master of the poet and the song. Pope.

ALO'NGST adv. [a corruption, as it seems, from along] Along, through the length

The Turks did keep strait watch and ward in all their ports thereabout alongst the sea-coast. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

ALO'OF adv. [all off, that is, quite off]

1. At a distance, with the particle from. It generally implies a small distance, such as is within view or observation.

Then bad the knight this lady yede aloof,
And to an hill herself withdrew aside,
From whence she might behold the battle's proof,
And eke be safe from danger far deserved. Fairy Queen, b. i.
As next in worth,
Came singly where he stood, on the bare strand,
While the promiscuous crowd stood yet aloof. Parad. Lost.
The noise approaches, though our palace stood
Aloof from streets, encompass'd with a wood. Dryden

2. Applied to persons, it often insinuates caution and circumspection.

Turn on the bloody hounds with heads of steel,
And make the cowards stand aloof at bay. Stark Henry VI
Going northwards, aloof, as long as they had any doubt of being pursued, at last when they were out of reach, they turned and crossed the ocean to Spain. Bacon
The king would not, by any means, enter the city, until he had aloof seen the cross set up upon the greater tower of Granada, whereby it became Christian ground. Bacon's Hen. VII
Two pots stood by a river, one of brass, the other of clay. The water carried them away; the earthen vessel kept aloof from t'other. L'Estrange's Fables
The strong may fight aloof; Anæus try'd
His force too near, and by presuming dy'd. Dryd. Fables

3. In a figurative sense, it is used to import art or cunning in conversation, by which a man holds the principal question at a distance.

Nor do we find him forward to be sounded,
But with a crafty madness keeps aloof,
When we would bring him on to some confession
Of his true state. Shakesp. Hamlet

4. It is used metaphorically of persons that will not be seen in a design.

It is necessary the queen join, for, if she stood aloof, there will be still suspicions it being a received opinion in the world, that she hath a great interest in the king's favour and power.

5. It is applied to things not properly belonging to each other.

Love's not love,
When it is mingled with regards that stand
Aloof from th' entire point Sh. King Lear

ALOU'D. adv. [from a and loud.] Loudly, strong voice with a great noise.

Strangled he dies! yet seems to cry aloud,
To warn the mighty, and instruct the proud,
That of the great, neglecting to be wise,
Heav'n in a moment makes an heap of dust Waller
Then heav'n a sigh more than ordinary aloud,
And threaten'd look aloft a gathering cloud. Lloyd Recond vis

ALOW. adv. [from a and low] plac
And now [illegible]
As born through air, and [illegible] Dryden.

It is in vain to speak of planting laws, and plotting policy, till they be altogether subdued. Spenser's State of Ireland.

We find not in the world any people that hath lived altogether without religion. Hooker, b. v. § 18.

If death and danger are things that really cannot be endured, no man could ever be obliged to suffer for his conscience, or to die for his religion, it being altogether as absurd to imagine a man obliged to suffer, as to do impossibilities. South.

I do not altogether disapprove of the manner of interweaving texts of scripture through the style of your sermon. Swift.

2. Conjunctly, in company. This is rather all together.

Cousin of Somerset, join you with me,
And altogether with the duke of Suffolk,
We'll quickly hoist duke Humphry from his seat.
Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. ii.

ALUDEL. n. s. [from a and lutum, that is, without lute.]

Aludels are subliming pots used in chemistry, without bottoms, and fitted into one another, as many as there is occasion for, without luting. At the bottom of the furnace is a pot that holds the matter to be sublimed, and, at the top is a head, to retain the flowers that rise up. Quincy.

ALUM. n. s. [alumen, Lat.]

A kind of mineral salt, of an acid taste, leaving in the mouth a sense of sweetness, accompanied with a considerable degree of astringency. The ancient naturalists allow of two sorts of alum, natural and factitious. The natural is found in the island of Melos, being a kind of whitish stone, very light, friable, and porous, and streaked with filaments resembling silver. The factitious alum is prepared in different manners, according to the different materials of which it is made. Hence arise red, Roman, and citron alum; also plumose, saccharine, and burnt alum. England, Italy, and Flanders, are the countries where alum is principally produced; and the English roche-alum is made from a bluish mineral stone, frequent in the hills of Yorkshire and Lancashire. Alum is used in medicine as an absorbent, but, being apt to excite vomiting, it is seldom prescribed inwardly. It is used outwardly in astringent lotions, and is an ingredient in several dentifrices and cosmeticks. It is a principal ingredient in dying and colouring; neither of which can be well performed without it. It serves to bind the colour upon the stuffs, and has the same uses there, that gum water and glutinous oils have in painting. It also disposes stuffs to take the colour, and adds a degree of briskness and delicacy to it. This effect of alum seems to proceed from its styptick or astringent quality, by which it binds the finer parts of colours together, and prevents their exhaling. Hence also it preserves paper, that has been dipped in its water, from sinking when wrote upon.

Saccharine alum bears a near resemblance to sugar, and is a composition of common alum, with rose-water and whites of eggs boiled together, to the consistence of a paste, and thus moulded at pleasure. As it cools, it grows hard as a stone, and is used as a cosmetick.

Burnt alum is alum calcined over the fire, and thus rendered whiter, more light, and more easily pulverized.

Plumose or plume alum is a sort of false mineral stone, of various colours, most commonly white, bordering on green, resembling Venetian talc, except that, instead of scales, it rises in threads or fibres, resembling those of a feather, whence its name from pluma, a feather. Some will have this to be the lapis amiantus of the ancients. Chambers.

By long beating the white of an egg with a lump of alum, you may bring it, for the most part, into white curds. Boyle.

ALUM STONE. n. s. A stone or calx used in surgery, perhaps [illegible]

She gargled with oxycrate, and was in a few days cured, by touching it with the vitriol and alum stones. Wiseman's Surgery.

ALUMINOUS. adj. [from alum.] Relating to alum, or consisting of alum.

Nor do we reasonably conclude, because, by a cold and aluminous moisture, it is also a while to resist the fire, that, from a peculiarity of nature, it subsisteth and liveth in it. Brown.

The tumour may have other mixture with it, to make it of a vitriolick or aluminous nature. Wiseman's Surgery.

ALWAYS adv. [it is sometimes written alway, compounded of all and way, callepaya, Sax. tuttoviа, Ital.]

1. Perpetually; throughout all time, opposed to sometime, or to now.

That, which sometime is expedient, doth not always to continue. Hooker, b. iv. § 14.

Man never is, but always to be blest. Pope.

2. Constantly; without variation; opposed to sometimes, or to now and then.

He is always great, when some great occasion is presented to him. Dryden.

A. M. Stands for artium magister, or master of arts; the second degree of our universities, which, in some foreign countries, is called doctor of philosophy.

AM. The first person of the verb to be. [See TO BE.]

And God said unto Moses, I am that I am: and he said, thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I am hath sent me unto you. Exodus, iii. 14.

Come then, my soul! I call thee by that name,
Thou busy thing, from whence I know I am
For knowing what I am, I know [illegible],
Since that must needs exist, which can impart. Prior.

AMABILITY. n. s. [from amabilis, Lat.] Loveliness, the power of pleasing.

No rules can make amability, our minds and apprehensions make that, and so is our felicity. Taylor.

AMADETTO. n. s. A sort of pear [See PEAR.] so called, says Skinner, from the name of him who cultivated it.

AMADOT. n. s. A sort of pear [See PEAR.]

AMAIN. adv. [from maine, or maigne, old Fr. derived from magnus, Lat.] With vehemence, with vigour; fiercely, violently. It is used of any action performed with precipitation, whether of fear or courage, or of any violent effort.

Great lords, from Ireland am I come amain,
To signify that rebels there are up,
And put the Englishmen unto the sword. Shak. Henry VI.

What! when we fled amain, pursued, and struck
With heav'n's affrighting thunder, and besought
The deep to shelter us? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

The hills, to their supply,
Vapour and exhalation dusk and moist,
Sent up amain. Par. Lost.

From hence the boar was roused, and springing amain,
Like lightning sudden, on the warrior train
Beats down the trees before him, shakes the ground,
The forest echoes to the cracking sound,
Shout the fierce youth, and clamours ring around. Dry.

AMALGAM } n. s. [ἅμα and γάμος.] The mixture of metals
AMALGAMA. } procured by amalgamation. See AMALGAMATION.

The induration of the amalgam appears to proceed from the new texture resulting from the coalition of the mingled ingredients, that make up the amalgam. Boyle.

TO AMALGAMATE. v. a. [from amalgam.]

To unite metals with quicksilver, which may be practised upon all metals, except iron and copper. The use of this operation is, to make the metal soft and ductile. Gold is, by this method, drawn over other materials by the gilders.

AMALGAMATION. n. s. [from amalgamate.] The act or practice of amalgamating metals.

Amalgamation is the mixing of mercury with any of the metals. The manner is thus in gold, the rest are answerable: Take six parts of mercury, mix them hot in a crucible, and pour them to one part of gold made red hot in another crucible, stir these well that they may incorporate, then cast the mass into cold water, and wash it. Bacon's Physical Remains.

AMANDATION. n. s. [from amando, Lat.] The act of sending on a message, or employment.

AMANUENSIS. n. s. [Lat.] A person who writes what another dictates.

AMARANTH n. s. [amarantus, Lat. from ἀ and μαραίνω.] The name of a plant.

The flowers have no petals, the cup of the flower is dry and multifid, the seeds are included in membranaceous vessels, which, when come to maturity, burst open transversely or horizontally, like purslane, each of which contains one or more roundish seeds.

Among the many species, the most beautiful are, 1. The tree amaranth. 2. The long perennial amaranth, with reddish coloured seeds, commonly called Love lies a bleeding. All these plants must be sown on a good hotbed in February, or the beginning g ining of March. They produce large beautiful flowers, and perfect their feed in September. Miller.

2. In poetry, it is sometimes an imaginary flower, supposed, according to its name, never to fad

Immortal amaranth! a flower which once
In paradise, fast by the tree of life,
Began to bloom; but soon, for man's offence,
To heav'n remov'd, where first it grew, there grows,
And flow'rs aloft, shading the fount of life,
And where the river of bliss, thro' midst of heav'n,
Rows o'er Elysian flow'rs her amber stream
With these, that never fade, the spirits elect
Bind their resplendent locks, inwreath'd with beams.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii. l. 353.

AMARANTHINE. adj. [amaranthinus, Lat.] Relating to amaranths, consisting of amaranths.

By the streams that ever flow,
By the fragrant winds that blow
O'er the Elysian flow'rs,
By those happy souls who dwell
In yellow meads of Asphodel,
Or amaranthine bow'rs. Pope's St Cecilia.

AMA'RITUDE. n. f. [amaritudo, Lat.] Bitterness.

What amaritude or acrimony is deprehended in choler, it acquires from a commixture of melancholy, or external [illegible] light bodies Harvey on Consumptions.

AMARULENCE. n. f. [amaritudo, Lat.] Bitterness. D

AMASMENT. n. f. [from amass.] A heap, an accumulation, a collection.

What is now in the subject, is but an amassment of imaginary conceptions, prejudices, ungrounded opinions, and infinite [illegible]

To AMA'SS. v. a. [amasser, Fr.]

1. To collect together into one heap or mass.

The rich man is not blamed, as having made use of any unlawful means to amass riches, as having thriven by fraud and injustice. Atterbury's Sermons.

When we would think of infinite space, or duration, we, [illegible] usually make some very large idea, as perhaps of m[illegible], or miles, which possibly we double and multiply several times. All that we thus amass together in our thoughts, is positive, and the assemblage of a great number of positive ideas [illegible]

2. In a figurative sense, to add one thing to another, generally with some share of reproach, either of eagerness or indiscrimination

Such as amass all relations, must err in some, and be unbelieved in many. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i.

Do not content yourselves with mere words, lest your improvements only amass a heap of unintelligible phrases.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

The life of Homer has been written, by amassing all the traditions and hints the writers could meet with, in order to tell a story of him to the world. Pope's Essay on Homer.

To AMA'TE. v. a. [from a and mate. See MATE.]

1. To accompany, to entertain as a companion. It is now obsolete.

A lovely bevy of fair ladies sate,
Courted of many a jolly paramour,
The which did them immodest way amate,
And each one sought his lady to aggrate. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

2. To terrify; to strike with horrour. In this sense, it is derived from the old French, mater, to crush or subdue.

AMATO'RCULIST. n. f. [amatorculus, Lat.] A little insignificant lover; a pretender to affection. Dict.

AMATORY adj. [amatorius, Lat.] Relating to love; causing love.

In the same thing whether one ravish Lucretia by force, as Tarquin, or by amatory potions, not only allure her, but necessitate her to satisfy his lust, and incline her effectually, and draw her inevitably to follow him spontaneously.
Bramhall against Hobbes.

AMAUROSIS n. f. [ἀμαύρωσις.] A dimness of sight, not from any visible defect in the eye, but from some distemperature of the inner parts, occasioning the representations of flies and dust floating before the eyes: which appearances are the parts of the retina hid and compressed by the blood vessels being too much distended; so that, in many of its parts, all sense is lost; and therefore no images can be painted upon them, whereby the eyes, continually rolling round, many parts of objects failing successively upon them, are obscure. The cure of this depends upon a removal of the stagnations in the extremities of those arteries which run over the bottom of the eye. Quincy.

To AMA'ZE. v. a. [from a and maze, perplexity.]

1. To confuse with terrour

Yea, I will make many people amazed at thee, and their kings shall be horribly afraid for thee, when I shall brandish my sword before them, and they shall tremble at every moment, every man for his own life, in the day of the fall. Ezek. xxxii. 10.

2. To put into confusion with wonder

Go, heavenly pair, and with your dazling virtues,
Your courage, truth, your innocence and love,
Amaze and charm mankind. Smith's Phædr. and Hippol.

3. To put into perplexity.

That cannot choose but amaze him. If he be not amazed, he will be mocked; if he be amazed, he will every way be mocked. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

AMAZE. n. f. [from the verb amaze.] Astonishment, confusion, either of fear or wonder

Fairfax, whose name in arms thro' Europe rings,
And fills all mouths with envy or with praise,
And all her jealous monarchs with amaze,
And rumours loud. Milton's Paradise Regained.

Meantime the Trojan cuts his watry way,
Pleas'd on his voyage thro' the curling sea,
Then casting back his eyes with dire amaze,
Sees, on the Punick shore, the mounting blaze. Dryden.

AMA'ZEDLY. adv. [from amazed.] Confusedly; with amazement; with confusion

I speak amazedly, and it becomes
My marvel, and my message. Why
Stands Macbeth thus amazedly!
Come, sirs, cheer me up his sprights. Macbeth

AMA'ZEDNESS. n. f. [from amazed.] The state of being amazed, astonishment; wonder, confusion.

I was by at the opening of the farther, heard the old shepherd deliver the manner how he found it, whereupon, after a little amazedness, we were all commanded out of the chamber.
Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

AMA'ZEMENT n. f. [from amaze.]

1. Such a confused apprehension as does not leave reason its full force; extreme fear, horrour.

He answer'd nought at all, but adding new
Fear to his first amazement, staring wide,
With stony eyes, and heartless hollow hue,
Astonish'd stood, as one that had espy'd
Infernal furies, with their chains unty'd. Fairy Queen.

But look! amazement on thy mother sits;
O step between her and her fighting soul:
Conceit in weakest bodies strongest works. Shak. Hamlet.

2. Extreme dejection.

He ended, and his words impression left
Of much amazement to th' infernal crew,
Distracted and surpris'd with deep dismay
At these sad tidings. Milton's Paradise Regained, b. i.

[illegible]

Had you, some ages past, this race of glory
Run, with amazement we should read your story;
But living virtue, all atchievements past,
Meets envy still to grapple with at last. Waller.

4. Astonishment, wonder at an unexpected event.

They knew that it was he which sat for alms at the Beautiful gate of the temple, and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him. Acts, iii. 10.

AMA'ZING. participial adj. [from amaze.] Wonderful, astonishing.

It is indeed an amazing thing to see the present desolation of Italy, when one considers what incredible multitudes of people it abounded with during the reigns of the Roman emperours.
Addison's Remarks on Italy.

AMA'ZINGLY. adv. [from amazing.] To a degree that may excite astonishment; wonderfully.

If we arise to the world of spirits, our knowledge of them must be amazingly imperfect, when there is not the least grain of sand but has too many difficulties belonging to it, for the wisest philosopher to answer Watts's Logick.

AMAZON. n. f. [α and μάζα.] The Amazons were a race of women famous for valour, who inhabited Caucasus, they are so called from their cutting off their breasts, to use their weapons better. A warlike woman; a virago.

Stay, stay thy hands, thou art an amazon,
And fightest with the sword Shakesp. Henry VI.

AMBAGES n. f. [Lat.] A circuit of words, a circumlocutory form of speech, a multiplicity of words, an indirect manner of expression.

They gave those complex ideas names, that they might the more easily record and discourse of things they were daily conversant in, without long ambages and circumlocutions, and that the things, they were continually to give and receive information about, might be the either and quicker understood. Locke.

AMBA'GIOUS. adj. [from ambages.] Circumlocutory, perplexed; tedious. D

AMBASSA'DE. n. f. [ambassade, Fr.] Embassy; character or business of an ambassador, a word not now in use.

When you disgraced me in my ambassade,
Then I degraded you from being king. Shak. Henry VI.

AMBA'SSADOUR. n. f. [ambassadeur, Fr. embaxador, Span. It is written differently, as it is supposed to come from the French or Spanish language; and the original derivation being uncertain, it is not easy to settle its orthography. Some derive it from the Hebrew כבשר, to tell, and כבשר, a messenger, others from ambactus, which, in the old Gaulish, signified a servant; whence ambassia, in low Latin, is found to signify service, and ambascator, a servant, others deduce it from ambacht, in old

Teutonick,

Teuton ck, ſignifying a government, and Junius mentions a poſſibility of its deſcent from ambiare, and others from am for ad, and baſſus, low, as ſuppoſing the act of ſending an ambaſſadour, to be in ſome ſort an act of ſubmiſſion. All theſe derivations lead to write ambaſſadour, not embaſſadour]

A perſon ſent in a publick manner from one ſovereign power to another, and ſuppoſed to repreſent the power from which he is ſent. The perſon of an ambaſſadour is inviolable.

Ambaſſador is, in popular language, the general name of a meſſenger from a ſovereign power, and ſometimes, ludicrouſly, from common perſons. In the juridical and formal language, it ſignifies particularly a miniſter of the higheſt rank reſiding in another country, and is diſtinguiſhed from an envoy, who is of leſs dignity

Give firſt admittance to th' ambaſſadours. Shak. Hamlet.
Rais'd by theſe hopes, I ſent no news before,
Nor ask'd you leave, nor did your faith implore,
But come, without a pledge, my own ambaſſadour Dryden.
Oft have their black ambaſſadours appear'd
Loaden with gifts, and ſu'd to the courts of Zama. Add. Cato.

AMBA'SSADRESS n. ſ. [ambaſſadrice, Fr.]

1. The lady of an ambaſſadour
2. In humorous language, a woman ſent on a meſſage.

Well, my ambaſſadreſs——
Come you to menace war, and loud defiance?
Or does the peaceful olive grace your brow? Rowe's Penit.

A'MBASSAGE. n. ſ. [from ambaſſadour] An embaſſy; the buſineſs of an ambaſſadour

Maximinian entertained them with dilatory anſwers; ſo as the formal part of their ambaſſage might well warrant their further ſtay. Bacon's Henry VII.

A'MBER. n. ſ. [from ambar, Arab. whence the lower writers

A yellow tranſparent ſubſtance of a gummous or bituminous conſiſtence, but a reſinous taſte, and a ſmell like oil of turpentine, chiefly found in the Baltick ſea, along the coaſts of Pruſſia. Some naturaliſts refer it to the vegetable, others to the mineral, and ſome even to the animal kingdom. Pliny deſcribes it as a reſinous juice, oozing from aged pines and firs, and diſcharged thence into the ſea; where, undergoing ſome alteration, it is thrown, in this form, upon the ſhores of Pruſſia, which

He adds, that it was hence the ancients gave it ion of ſuccinum, from ſuccus, juice. This opinion of the ancient naturaliſt is confirmed by the obſervation of many of the moderns, particularly Father Camelli. Philoſ. Tranſact.
N° 190. Some have imagined it a concretion of the tears of birds; others, the urine of a beaſt, others, the ſcum of the lake
Cephiſis, near the Atlantick, others, a congelation formed in the Baltick, and in ſome fountains, where it is found ſwimming like pitch. Others ſuppoſe it a bitumen trickling into the ſea from ſubterraneous ſources; but this opinion is alſo diſcarded, as good amber having been found in digging at a conſiderable diſtance from the ſea, as that gathered on the coaſt. Boerhaave ranks it with camphire, which is a concrete oil of aromatick plants, elaborated by heat into a cryſtalline form. Amber aſſumes all figures in the ground; that of a pear, an almond, a pea, and, among others, there have been found letters very well formed, and even Hebrew and Arabick characters. Within ſome pieces of amber have been found leaves, and inſects included; which ſeems to indicate, either that the amber was originally in a fluid ſtate, or, that having been expoſed to the ſun, it was ſoftened, and rendered ſuſceptible of the leaves and inſects. Amber, when rubbed, draws or attracts bodies to it; and, by friction, is brought to yield light pretty copiouſly in the dark. Some diſtinguiſh amber into yellow, white, brown, and black, but the two latter are ſuppoſed to be of a different nature and denomination; the one called jet, the other ambergris. The white is moſt valued for medicinal uſes, and the yellow for being wrought into beads and toys, becauſe of its tranſparency. Trev. Chamb.

Liquid amber, is a kind of native balſam or reſin, like turpentine, clear, reddiſh, or yelloviſh, of a pleaſant ſmell, almoſt like ambergris. It flows from an inciſion made in the bark of a fine large tree in New Spain, called by the natives oſoſol, but it hardens, as it grows older, into a ſolid form, and is brought to us in barrels. It is reputed an excellent balſam. Chambers.

If light penetrateth any clear body, that is coloured, as painted glaſs, amber, water, and the like, it gives the light the colour of its medium. Peacham on Drawing.

No interwoven reeds a garland made,
To hide his brows within the vulgar ſhade;
But popular wreaths around his temples ſpread,
And tears of amber trickled down his head. Addiſ. Italy.
The ſpoils of elephants the roofs inlay,
And ſtudded amber darts a golden ray. Pope's Odyſſey.

A'MBER adj. Conſiſting of amber

With ſcarfs, and fans, and double charge of brav'ry,
With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knav'ry.
Shakeſpeare's Taming of the Shrew.

AMBER DRINK n. ſ. Drink of the colour of amber, or reſembling amber in colour and tranſparency

All your clear amber drink is flat. Bacon's Nat. Hiſtory.

A'MBERORIS. n. ſ. [from amber and gris, or grey; that is, grey amber]

A fragrant drug, that melts almoſt like wax, commonly of a greyiſh or aſh colour, uſed both as a perfume and a cordial. It is found on the ſea coaſts of ſeveral warm countries, and on the weſtern coaſts of Ireland. Some imagine it to be the excrement of a bird, which, being melted by the heat of the ſun, and waſhed off the ſhore by the waves, is ſwallowed by whales, who return it back in the condition we find it. Others conclude it to be the excrement of a cetaceous fiſh, becauſe ſometimes found in the inteſtines of ſuch animals. But we have no inſtance of any excrement capable of melting like wax; and if it were the excrement of a whale, it ſhould rather be found where theſe animals abound, as about Greenland. Others take it for a kind of wax or gum, which diſtils from trees, and drops into the ſea, where it congeals. Many of the orientals imagine it ſprings out of the ſea, as naphtha does out of ſome fountains. Others ſuppoſe it a ſea muſhroom, torn up from the bottom by the violence of tempeſts. Other aſſert it to be a vegetable production, iſſuing out of the root of a tree, whoſe roots always ſhoot toward the ſea, and diſcharge themſelves into it. Others maintain, that ambergris is made from the honey-combs, which fall into the ſea from the rocks, where the bees had formed their neſts; ſeveral perſons having ſeen pieces that were half ambergris, and half plain honey-comb; and others have found large pieces of ambergris, in which, when broke, honey-comb, and honey too, were found in the middle. Some affirm it to be a true animal concrete, formed in balls in the body of the male ſpermaceti whale, and lodged in a large oval bag over the teſticles. But, beſides that it is not one ſpermaceti whale in a hundred, that is found to have ambergris, Neumann, chemiſt to the king of Pruſſia, abſolutely denies it to be an animal ſubſtance, as not yielding in the analyſis, any one animal principle. It may indeed be found in whales, but it muſt have been ſwallowed by them. He concludes it to be a bitumen iſſuing out of the earth into the ſea; at firſt of a viſcous conſiſtence, but hardening, by its mixture with ſome liquid naphtha, into the form in which we find it. Trevoux. Chambers.

Bermudas wall'd with rocks, who does not know
That happy iſland, where huge lemons grow,
Where ſhining pearl, coral, and many a pound,
On the rich ſhore, of ambergris is found. Waller.

AMBER SEED, or muſk ſeed, reſembles millet, is of a bitteriſh taſte, and brought dry from Martinico and Egypt. The Egyptians uſe it internally as a cordial. It gives a grateful ſcent to the breath after eating. Chambers.

AMBER TREE. n. ſ. [frutex Africanus ambram ſpirans.] A ſhrub, whoſe beauty is in its ſmall evergreen leaves, which grow as cloſe as heath, and, being bruiſed between the fingers, emit a very fragrant odour Miller.

AMBIDE'XTER. n. ſ. [Lat.]

1. A man who has equally the uſe of both his hands.

Rodginus, undertaking to give a reaſon of ambidexters, and left-handed men, delivereth a three opinion. Brown's Vul. Err.

2. A man who is equally ready to act on either ſide, in party diſputes. This ſenſe is ludicrous.

AMBIDEXTE'RITY. n. ſ. [from ambidexter]

1. The quality of being able equally to uſe both hands.
2. Double dealing.

AMBIDE'XTROUS. adj. [from ambidexter, Lat.]

1. Double dealing; practiſing on both ſides.

Æſop condemns the double practices of trimmers, and all falſe, ſhuffling, and ambidextrous dealings. L'Eſtrange's Fab.

2. Having, with equal facility, the uſe of either hand

Others, not conſidering ambidextrous and left-handed men, do totally ſubmit unto the efficacy of the ſver Vulgar Err.

AMBIDE'XTROUSNESS. n. ſ. [from ambidextrous.] The quality of being ambidextrous. Dict.

A'MBIENT. adj. [ambiens, Lat.] Surrounding; encompaſſing; inveſting.

This which yields or fills
All ſpace, the ambient air wide-interfus'd. Paradiſe Loſt.

The thickneſs of a plate requiſite to produce any colour, depends only on the denſity of the plate, and not on that of the ambient medium. Newton's Opticks.

Around him dance the roſy hours,
And damaſking the ground with flow'rs,
With ambient ſweets perfume the morn. Fenton to L. Gower.
Illuſtrious virtues, who by turns have roſe,
With happy laws her empire to ſuſtain,
And with full pow'r aſſert her ambient main. P
The ambient æther is too liquid and empty, to impel horizontally with that prodigious celerity. Bentley's Sermons.

A'MBIGU. n. ſ [French] An entertainment, conſiſting not of regular courſes, but of a medley of diſhes ſet on together.

When ſtraiten'd in your time, and ſervants few,
You'd richly then compoſe an ambigu,
Where firſt and ſecond courſe, and your deſert,
All in our ſingle table have their part. King's Art of Cookery.

AMBIGU'ITY. n. ſ. [from ambiguous.] Doubtfulneſs of meaning; uncertainty of ſignification, double meaning

A M B

With ambiguities they often entangle themſelves, not marking what doth agree to the word of God in itſelf, and what in regard of outward accidents. Hooker, b. v.

We can clear theſe ambiguities,
And know their ſpring, their head, their true deſcent.
Shakeſpeare's Romeo and Juliet

The words are of ſingle ſignification, without any ambiguity; and therefore I ſhall not trouble you, by ſtraining for an interpretation, where there is no difficulty; or diſtinction, where there is no difference. South.

AMBIGUOUS. adj. [ambiguus, Lat.]

1. Doubtful; having two meanings; of uncertain ſignification.

But what have been thy anſwers, what but dark,
Ambiguous, and with doubtful ſenſe deluding. Par. Regain.

Some expreſſions in the covenant were ambiguous, and were left ſo; becauſe the perſons who framed them, were not all of one mind. Clarendon, b. vii.

2. Applied to perſons uſing doubtful expreſſions. It is applied to expreſſions, or thoſe that uſe them, not to a dubious, or ſuſpended ſtate of mind.

Th' ambiguous god, who rul'd her labouring breaſt,
In theſe myſterious words his mind expreſs;
Some truths reveal'd, in terms involv'd the reſt. } Dryd.

Silence at length the gay Antinous broke,
Conſtrain'd a ſmile, and thus ambiguous ſpoke. Pope's Od.

AMBI'GUOUSLY adv. [from ambiguous.] In an ambiguous manner; doubtfully; uncertainly; with double meaning.

AMBI'GUOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from ambiguous] The quality of being ambiguous; uncertainty of meaning; duplicity of ſignification.

AMBI'LOGY. n. ſ. [from ambo, Lat. and λογος.] Talk of ambiguous or doubtful ſignification. Dict.

AMBI'LOQUOUS. adj. [from ambo and loquor, Lat.] Uſing ambiguous and doubtful expreſſions. Dict.

AMBI'LOQUY. n. ſ. [ambiloquium, Lat.] The uſe of doubtful and indeterminate expreſſions, diſcourſe of doubtful meaning. D.

A'MBIT. n. ſ. [ambitus, Lat.] The compaſs or circuit of any thing; the line that encompaſſes any thing.

The tuſk of a wild boar winds about almoſt into a perfect ring or hoop; only it is a little writhen. In meaſuring by the ambit, it is long or round about a foot and two inches; its baſis an inch over. Grew's Muſæum.

AMBI'TION. n. ſ. [ambitio, Lat.] The deſire of ſomething higher than is poſſeſſed at preſent.

1. The deſire of preferment or honour.

Who would think, without having ſuch a mind as Antipater, that ſo great goodneſs could not have bound gratefulneſs? and ſo high advancement not have ſatisfied his ambition? Sidn.

2. The deſire of any thing great or excellent.

The quick'ning power would be, and ſo would reſt;
The ſenſe would not be only, but be well.
But wit's ambition longeth to the beſt,
For it deſires in endleſs to dwell. Sir J. Davies.

Urge them, while their ſouls
Are capable of this ambition;
Leſt zeal, now melted by the windy breath
Of ſoft petitions, pity and remorſe,
Cool and congeal again to what it was. Shakeſp. K. John.

3. It is uſed with to before a verb, and of before a noun.

I had a very early ambition to recommend myſelf to your Lordſhip's patronage. Addiſon.

There was an ambition of wit, and an affectation of gayety. Pope's Preface to his Letters.

AMBI'TIOUS. adj. [ambitioſus, Lat.]

1. Seized or touched with ambition; deſirous of advancement; eager of honours; aſpiring. It has the particle of before the object of ambition.

The neighb'ring monarchs, by thy beauty led,
Contend in crouds, ambitious of thy bed
The world is at thy choice, except but one,
Except but him thou canſt not chooſe alone. Dryd. Fab.

You have been pleaſed not to ſuffer an old man to go diſcontented out of the world, for want of that protection, of which he had been ſo long ambitious. Dryden.

Trajan, a prince ambitious of glory, deſcended to the mouths of the Tigris and Euphrates, and went upon the ocean, where, ſeeing a veſſel trading to the Indies, he had thoughts of outdoing Alexander. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Eager to grow bigger; aſpiring.

I have ſeen
Th' ambitious ocean ſwell, and rage, and foam,
To be exalted with the threatening clouds. Shakeſp. J. Cæſ.

AMBI'TIOUSLY. adv. [from ambitious.] In an ambitious manner; with eagerneſs of advancement or preference.

With ſuch glad hearts did our deſparing men
Salute th' appearance of the prince's fleet;
And each ambitiouſly would claim the ken,
That with firſt eyes did diſtant ſafety meet. Dryd. Ann. Mir.

Here Flecknoe, as a place to fame well known,
Ambitiouſly deſign'd his Sh—'s throne. Dryden.

AMBI'TIOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from ambitious] The quality of being ambitious.

AMBITUDE. n. ſ. [ambio, Lat.] Compaſs; circuit; circumference.

To AMBLE. v. n. [ambler, Fr. ambulo, Lat.]

1. To move upon an amble. [See AMBLE.]

It is good, on ſome occaſions, to enjoy as much of the preſent, as will not endanger our futurity, and to provide ourſelves of the virtuoſo's faculty, which will be ſure to amble when the world is upon the hardeſt trot. Dryden's Virgil, Dedication.

2. To move eaſily, without hard ſhocks, or ſhaking.

Who ambles time withal? A rich man that hath not the gout; for he lives merrily, becauſe he feels no pain, knowing no burden of heavy tedious penury. Theſe time ambles withal. Shakeſpeare's As you like it.

3. In a rude croſs ſenſe, to move with ſubmiſſion, and by direction, as, a horſe that ambles, uſes a gait not natural.

A laughing, toying, wheedling, whimpering ſhe,
Shall make him amble on a goſſip's meſſage,
And take the diſtaff with a hand as patient,
As e'er did Hercules. Rowe's Jane Shore.

4. To walk daintily and affectedly.

I am rudely ſtamp't, and want love's majeſty,
To ſtrut before a wanton ambling nymph. Shakeſp. Ric. III.

AMBLE. n. ſ. [from to amble] A pace or movement in which the horſe removes both his leg on one ſide; as, on the far ſide, he removes his fore and hinder leg of the ſame ſide at one time, whilſt the legs on the near ſide ſtand ſtill, and when the far legs are upon the ground, the near ſide removes the fore leg and hinder leg, and the legs on the far ſide ſtand ſtill. An amble is the firſt pace of young colts, but when they have ſtrength to trot, they quit it. There is no amble in the manage; riding-maſters allow only of walk, trot, and gallop. A horſe may be put from a trot to a gallop without ſtopping, but cannot be put from an amble to a gallop without a ſtop, which interrupts the juſtneſs of the manage. Farrier's Dict.

AMBLER. n. ſ. [from to amble.] A horſe that has been taught to amble, a pacer.

AMBLINGLY adv. [from ambling] With an ambling movement.

AMBROSIA. n. ſ. [ἀμβροσία]

1. The imaginary food of the gods, from which every thing eminently pleaſing to the ſmell or taſte, is called ambroſia.

2. The name of a plant.

It has male floſculous flowers, produced on ſeparate parts of the ſame plant from the fruit, having no viſible petals; the fruit which ſucceeds the female flowers, is ſhaped like a club, and is prickly, containing one oblong ſeed in each.

The ſpecies are, 1. The marine or ſea ambroſia. 2. Taller unſavoury ſea ambroſia. 3. The talleſt Canada ambroſia, with rough plane tree leaves. The firſt ſort ſhould be ſown early in the ſpring, under a warm wall. The ſecond and third are common American weeds, which ſhould be ſown upon a gentle hotbed in the ſpring. None of them have much beauty to recommend them. Miller.

AMBRO'SIAL. adj. [from ambroſia.] Partaking of the nature or qualities of ambroſia; fragrant, delicious, delectable.

Thus while God ſpake, ambroſial fragrance fill'd
All heaven, and in the bleſſed ſpirits elect
Senſe of new joy ineffable diffus'd. Milton's Parad. Loſt.

The gifts of heaven my following ſong purſues,
Aerial honey, and ambroſial dews. Dryden's Virg. Georg.

To fartheſt ſhores th' ambroſial ſpirit flies,
Sweet to the world, and grateful to the ſkies. Pope.

A'MBRY n. ſ. [a word corrupted from almonry.]

1. The place where the almoner lives, or where alms are diſtributed.

2. The place where plate, and utenſils for houſekeeping, are kept; alſo a cupboard for keeping cold victuals: a word ſtill uſed in the northern counties, and in Scotland.

AMBS ACE. n. ſ. [from ambo, Lat. and ace] A double ace; ſo called when two dice turn up the ace.

I had rather be in this choice, than throw ambs ace for my life. Shakeſp. All's well that ends well.

This will be yet clearer, by conſidering his own influence of caſting ambs ace, though it partake more of contingency than of freedom. Suppoſing the poſiture of the party's hand who did throw the dice, ſuppoſing the figure of the table, and of the dice themſelves, ſuppoſing the meaſure of force applied, and ſuppoſing all other things which did concur to the production of that caſt, to be the very ſame they were, there is no doubt but in this caſe the caſt is neceſſary. Bramh. againſt Hobbes.

AMBULA'TION. n. ſ. [ambulatio, Lat.] The act of walking.

From the occult and inviſible motion of the muſcles in ſtation, proceed more offenſive laſſitudes, than from ambulation. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 1.

AMBULATORY. adj. [ambulo, Lat.]

1. That which has the power or faculty of walking.

The gradient, or ambulatory, are ſuch as require ſome baſis, or bottom, to uphold them in their motions: ſuch were thoſe ſtrange inventions, commonly attributed to Dædalus, or removing ſtatues, which, unleſs violently detained, would of themſelves run away. Wilkins's Mathemat. Magick.

2. That which happens during a paſſage or walk.

He was ſent to conduce hither the princeſs Henrietta Maria, of whom his majeſty had an ambulatory view in his travels. Wotton.

3. Moveable; as, an ambulatory court; a court which removes from place to place for the exerciſe of its juriſdiction.

AMBURY. n. ſ. A bloody wart on any part of a horſe's body.

AMBUSCA'DE n. ſ. [embuſcade, Fr. See AMBUSH.] A private ſtation in which men lie to ſurpriſe others; ambuſh.

Then waving high her torch, the ſignal made,
Which rous'd the Grecians from their ambuſcade. Dryden.

When I behold a faſhionable table ſet out, I fancy that gouts, fevers, and lethargies, with innumerable diſtempers, lie in ambuſcade among the diſhes. Addiſon. Spect. N° 195

AMBUSCA'DO. n. ſ. [embuſcada, Span.] A private poſt, in order to ſurpriſe an enemy.

Sometimes ſhe driveth o'er a ſoldier's neck,
And then he dreams of cutting foreign throats,
Of breaches, ambuſcadoes, Spaniſh blades,
Of healths five fathom deep. Shakeſp. Romeo and Juliet.

AMBUSH. n. ſ. [embuſche, Fr. from bois a wood; whence embuſcher, to hide in woods, ambuſhes being commonly laid under the concealment of thick foreſts.]

1. The poſt where ſoldiers or aſſaſſins are placed, in order to fall unexpected upon an enemy.

Charge, charge, their ground the faint Taxalans yield,
Bold in cloſe ambuſh, baſe in open field.
Dryden's Indian Emperour.

2. The act of ſurpriſing another, by lying in wait, or lodging in a ſecret poſt.

Nor ſhall we need,
With dangerous expedition, to invade
Heav'n, whoſe high walls fear no aſſault or ſiege,
Or ambuſh from the deep. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. ii.

3. The ſtate of being poſted privately, in order to ſurpriſe, the ſtate of lying in wait.

The reſidue retired deceitfully towards the place of their ambuſh, whence iſſued more. Then the earl gathered his ſmall company about him, and maintained the fight. But the enemy, whether perceiving ſome ſuccours advancing, or whether intending to draw the Engliſh further into their ambuſh, turned away at an eaſy pace. Heyward.

4. Perhaps the perſons placed in private ſtations.

For you, my noble lord of Lancaſter,
Once did I lay an ambuſh for your life. Shakeſp. Richard II.

AMBUSHED. adj. [from ambuſh.] Placed in ambuſh; lying in wait.

Thick as the ſhades, there iſſue ſwarming bands
Of ambuſh'd men, whom, by their arms and dreſs,
To be Taxallan enemies I gueſs. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

AMBUSHMENT. n. ſ. [from ambuſh, which ſee.] Ambuſh, ſurpriſe: a word now not uſed.

Like as a wily fox, that having ſpied
Where on a ſunny bank the lambs do play,
Full cloſely creeping by the hinder ſide,
Lies in ambuſhment of his hoped prey. Spenſer's Mutops.

AMBU'ST. adj. [amuſtus, Lat.] Burnt; ſcalded. Diet.

AMBU'STION. n. ſ. [amboſtio, Lat.] A burn; a ſcald.

AME'EL. n. ſ. [email, Fr.] The matter with which the variegated works are overlaid, which we call enamelled.

The materials of glaſs melted with calcined tin, compoſe an undiaphanous body. This white email is the baſis of all thoſe fine concretes that goldſmiths and artificers employ in the curious art of enamelling. Boyle on Colours.

AME'N adv. [A word of which the original has given riſe to many conjectures. Scaliger writes, that it is Arabick; and the Rabbies make it the compound of the initials of three words, ſignifying the Lord is a faithful king; but the word ſeems merely Hebrew, אמן, which, with a long train of derivatives, ſignifies firmneſs, certainty, fidelity.]

A term uſed at devotions, by which, at the end of a prayer, we mean, ſo be it, at the end of a creed, ſo it is.

One cried, God bleſs us! and, Amen! the other,
As they had ſeen me with theſe hangman's hands.
Liſtening their fear, I could not ſay Amen,
When they did ſay God bleſs us. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, from everlaſting and to everlaſting, Amen and amen. Pſalm xli. 13.

AME'NABLE. adj. [amenable, Fr. amener quelqu'un, in the French courts, ſignifies, to oblige one to appear to anſwer a charge exhibited againſt him.] Reſponſible, ſubject ſo as to be liable to enquiries or accounts.

Again, becauſe the inferiour ſort were looſe and poor, and not amenable to the law, he provided, by another act, that five of the beſt and eldeſt perſons of every ſept, ſhould bring in all the idle perſons of their ſurname, to be puniſhed by the law. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

AMENANCE. n. ſ. [It ſeems to come from amener, Fr.] Conduct, behaviour, mien: a word diſuſed.

For he is fit to uſe in all aſſays,
Whether for arms and warlike amenance,
Or elſe for wiſe and civil governance. Spenſ. Hubb. Tale

Well kend him ſo far ſpace,
Th' enchanter, by his arms and amenance,
When under him he ſaw his Lybian ſteed to prance.
Fairy Queen, b. ii. c. vi.

To AMEND. v. a. [amender, Fr. emendo, Lat.]

1. To correct, to change any thing that is wrong to ſomething better.

To reform the life, or cure wickedneſs.

In theſe two caſes we uſually write mend. See MEND.

Amend your ways and your doings, and I will cauſe you to dwell in this place. Jerem. vii. 3.

3. To reſtore paſſages in writers which the copiers are ſuppoſed to have depraved, to recover the true reading.

To AME'ND. v. n. To grow better. To amend differs from to improve, to improve ſuppoſes or not denies that the thing is well already, but to amend implies ſomething wrong.

As my fortune either amends or impairs, I may declare it unto you. Sidney.

At his touch
Such ſanctity hath heaven given his hand,
They preſently amend. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

AME'NDE. n. ſ. [French.] This word, in French, ſignifies a fine, by which recompenſe is ſuppoſed to be made for the fault committed. We uſe, in a cognate ſignification, the word amends.

AME'NDMENT n. ſ. [amendement, Fr.]

1. A change from bad for the better.

Before it was preſented on the ſtage, ſome things in it have paſſed your approbation and amendment. Dryd. Aureng. Pref.

Man is always mending and altering his works; but nature obſerves the ſame tenour, becauſe her works are ſo perfect, that there is no place for amendments; nothing that can be reprehended. Ray on the Creation.

There are many natural defects in the underſtanding, capable of amendment, which are overlooked and wholly neglected. Locke.

2. Reformation of life.

Our Lord and Saviour was of opinion, that they which would not be drawn to amendment of life, by the teſtimony which Moſes and the prophets have given, concerning the miſeries that follow ſinners after death, were not likely to be perſuaded by other means, although God from the dead ſhould have raiſed them up preachers. Hooker, b. v. § 22.

Behold! famine and plague, tribulation and anguiſh, are ſent as ſcourges for amendment. 2 Eſdras, xvi. 19.

Though a ſerious purpoſe of amendment, and true acts of contrition, before the habit, may be accepted by God; yet there is no ſure judgment whether this purpoſe be ſerious, or theſe acts true acts of contrition. Hammond's Practical Catechiſm.

3. Recovery of health.

Your honour's players hearing your amendment,
Are come to play a pleaſant comedy. Shakeſp. Tam. Shrew.

AME'NDMENT. [emendatio, Lat.] It ſignifies, in law, the correction of an error committed in a proceſs, and eſpied before or after judgment, and ſometimes after the party's ſeeking advantage by the error. Blount.

AME'NDER. n. ſ. [from amend.] The perſon that amends any thing.

AME'NDS. n. ſ. [amende, Fr. from which it ſeems to be accidentally corrupted.] Recompenſe, compenſation, attonement.

Your compenſation makes amends. Shakeſp. Tempeſt.

Of the amends recovered, little or nothing returns to thoſe that had ſuffered the wrong, but commonly all runs into the prince's coffers. Sir W. Raleigh's Eſſays.

Where I a priſ'ner chain'd, ſcarce freely draw
The air impriſon'd alſo, cloſe and damp,
Unwholeſome draught; but here I feel amends,
The breath of heav'n freſh blowing, pure and ſweet,
With day-ſpring born, here leave me to reſpire.
Milton's Sampſon Agoniſtes.

Some little hopes I have yet remaining, that I make the world ſome part of amends for many ill plays, by an heroick poem. Dryden's Aureng. Preface.

If our ſouls be immortal, this makes abundant amends and compenſation for the frailties of life, and ſufferings of this ſtate. Tillotſon.

It is a ſtrong argument for retribution hereafter, that virtuous perſons are very often unfortunate, and vicious perſons proſperous, which is repugnant to the nature of a Being, who appears infinitely wiſe and good in all his works, unleſs we may ſuppoſe that ſuch a promiſcuous diſtribution, which was neceſſary for carrying on the deſigns of providence in this life, was ſatisfied and made amends for in another. Spect. N° 483.

AMENITY. n. ſ. [amenité, Fr. amœnitas, Lat.] Pleaſantneſs, agreeableneſs of ſituation.

If the ſituation of Babylon was ſuch at firſt, as it was in the days of Herodotus, it was rather a ſeat of amenity and pleaſure, than conducing unto this intention. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To AMERCE. v. a. [amercier, Fr. ὀφλαρμὸν βάλλειν, ſeems to give the original.]

1. To puniſh with a pecuniary penalty; to exact a fine, to ſet fact a forfeiture. It is a word originally jurisdica, but adopted by other writers.

But I'd amerce you with so strong a fine,
That you shall all repent the loss of mine.
Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet

All the suitors were considerably amerced; yet this proved but an ineffectual remedy for those mischiefs. Hale's Laws of

2. Sometimes with the particle in before the fine.

They shall amerce him in an hundred shekels of silver, and give them unto the father of the damsel, because he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Israel. Deut. xxii.

3. Sometimes it is used, in imitation of the Greek construction with the particle of.

Millions of spirits, for his fault amerc'd
Of heav'n, and from eternal splendours flung
For his revolt. Milton's Paradise Lost, b.

AMERCER. n. s. [from amerce.] He that sets a fine upon misdemeanour; he that decrees or inflicts any pecuniary punishment or forfeiture.

AME'RCEMENT. } n. s. [from amerce.] The pecuniary pu-
AM[illegible] }

mercy of the king, or other lord in his court. Cowell

All amercements and fines that shall be imposed upon them, shall come unto themselves. Spenser's State of Ireland.

AMES ACE. n. s. [a corruption of the word ambs ace, which appears, from very old authorities, to have been early softened by omitting the b.] Two aces on two dice

But then my study was to cog the dice,
And next nimbly to throw the lucky size
To shun ames ace, that swept my stakes away
And watch the box, for fear they should convey False bones, and put upon me in the play. Dryd. Persius.

AMESS. n. s. [corrupted from amice.] A priest's vestment. Dict.

AMETHO'DICAL, adj. [from a and method.] Out of method; without method; irregular.

A'METHYST. n. s. [ἀμέθυστος, contrary to wine, or contrary to drunkenness, so called, either because it is not quite of the colour of wine, or because it was imagined to prevent inebriation.]

A precious stone of a violet colour, bordering on purple. The oriental amethyst is the hardest, scarcest, and most valuable: it is generally of a dove colour, though some are purple others white like the diamond. The German is of a violet colour, and the Spanish are of three sorts, the best are the blackest or deepest violet; others are almost quite white, and some few tinctured with yellow. They are found in a hill named St [illegible] munont, in Catalonia, by following the vein of reddish or black earth, or a vein in a rock so coloured, and are all hexangular, and pointed like crystal. Sometimes a great number is found sticking together, like the Bristol diamonds; but the best are found loose in the chinks of the rock. Beautiful ones are also found in the Pyrenean, and in the mountains of Auvergne. The amethyst is not extremely hard, but easy to be engraved upon, and is next in value to the emerald. Savary. Chambers

I observed some stones that nearly approached the granate complection; and several very nearly resembling the amethyst
Woodward on Fossils.

A'METHYST [in heraldry] signifies the same colour in a nobleman's coat, that purpure does in a gentleman's

AMETHY'STINE. adj. [from amethyst.] Resembling an amethyst in colour

A'MIABLE. adj. [aimable, Fr.]

1. Lovely; pleasing

That which is good in the actions of men, doth not only delight as profitable, but as amiable also. Hooker

She told her, while she kept it,
'Twould make her amiable, subdue my father
Entirely to her love, but if she lost it,
Or made a gift of it, my father's eye
Should hold her loathed. Shakesp. Othello.

2. Pretending love, shewing love.

Spend all, only give me so much time in exchange, as to lay amiable siege to the honesty of this Ford's wife, use your art of wooing. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor

AMIABLENESS. n. s. [from amiable.] The quality of being amiable, loveliness, power of raising love.

As soon as the natural gaiety and amiableness of the young man wears off, they have nothing left to commend them, but lie by among the lumber and refuse of the species. Addis. Guard.

A'MIABLY. adv. [from amiable.] In an amiable manner, in such a manner as to excite love.

A'MICABLE. adj. [amicabilis, Lat.] Friendly, kind. It is commonly used of more than one, as, they live in an amicable manner; but we seldom say, an amicable action, or an amicable man, though it be so used in this passage

O grace serene! oh virtue heav'nly fair,
Divine oblivion of low-thoughted care!
Fresh blooming hope, gay daughter of the sky!
And faith, our early immortality!
Enter each mind, each amicable guest,
Receive and wrap me in eternal rest. Pope's Eloisa to Abelard.

A'MICABLENESS. n. s. [from amicable.] The quality of being amicable; friendliness, goodwill.

AMICABLY. adv. [from amicable.] In an amicable manner; in a friendly way; with goodwill and concord.

They see
Through the dun mist, in blooming beauty fresh,
A various train of youths, that amicably wrestle
O'er verdant meads, and pleasant, perhaps, revolv'd
Anna's late conquests. Philips.

I found my subjects amicably join,
To moderate their defects, by mixing mine. Prior

In Holland itself, where it is pretended that the variety of sects live so amicably together, it is notorious how a turbulent party, of late with the Arminians, did attempt to destroy the republick. Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of England man.

AMICE n. s. [amictus, Lat. amict, Fr. Primum ex sex indumentis episcopo & presbyteris communibus sunt, amictus, alba, cingulum, stola, manipulus, & planeta. Du Cange. Amictus quo collum strangitur, & pectus tegitur, confitetur interiora hominis designat, reget enim eos, ne vanitates cogitet, strenget autem collum, ne inde ad linguam transeat incantatum. Bruno.] The first or undermost part of a priest's habit, over which he wears the alb.

Thus past the night so foul, till morning fair
Came forth with pilgrim steps in amice grey Paradise Reg.

Or some a priest, succinct in amice white,
Attends. Pope's Dunciad, b. iv. l. 441.

AMID. } prep. [from a and mid, or midst.]
AMIDST }

1. In the midst, equally distant from either extremity.

Of the fruit
Of each tree in the garden we may eat;
But of the fruit of this fair tree, amidst
The garden, God hath said, ye shall not eat. Paradise Lost.

The two ports, the bagnio, and Donatello's statue of the great duke, amidst the four slaves, chained to his pedestal, are very noble sights. Addison on Italy.

2. Mingled with, surrounded by, in the admist of another thing.

Amid my flock with woe my voice I tear,
And, but bewitch'd, who to his flock would moan? Sidney.

So hills amid the air encounter'd hills,
Hurl'd to and fro, with jaculation dire Milt. Parad. Lost.

What have I done, to name that wealthy swain,
The boar amidst my crystal streams I bring;
And southern winds to blast my flow'ry spring. Dryd. Virg.

[illegible]
And fires with rage amid the sylvan shades. Dryd. Æn.

3. Amongst, conjoined with.

What tho' no real voice nor sound
Amid their radiant orbs be found?
In reason's ear they all rejoice,
And utter forth a glorious voice,
For ever singing, as they shine,
"The hand that made us is divine." Addis. Spect. N° 465.

AMISS adv. [from a, which, in this form of composition, often signifies according to, and miss, the English participle, which shews any thing, like the Greek ἁμαρ, to be wrong; as, to misaccount, to count erroneously, to misdo, to commit a crime amiss therefore signifies not right, or out of order.]

1. Faulty, criminal.

For that which thou hast sworn to do amiss,
Is yet amiss when it is truly done. Shakesp. King John.

2. Faultily; criminally.

We hope therefore to reform ourselves, if at any time we have done amiss, is not to sever ourselves from the church we were of before. Hooker, b. iii. § 1.

O ye powers that search
The heart of man, and weigh his inmost thoughts,
If I have done amiss, impute it not. Addison's Cato.

3. In an ill sense.

She sigh'd withal, they construe all amiss,
And thought she wish'd to kiss who long'd to kiss. Fairfax.

4. Wrong, improper; unfit.

Examples have not generally the force of laws, which all men ought to keep, but of counsels only and persuasions, not amiss to be followed by them, whose case is the like. Hooker.

Ethicks, though a man had all science, and all principles, yet it might not be amiss to have some conference. Tillotson, Pref.

5. Wrong, not according to the perfection of the thing, whatever it be.

Your kindred is not much amiss, 'tis true;
Yet I am somewhat better born than you. Dryden.

I built a wall, and when the masons plaid the knaves, nothing delighted me so much as to stand by, while my servants threw down what was amiss. Swift.

6. Reproachful, irreverent.

Every people, nation, and language, which speak any thing amiss against the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, shall be cut in pieces, and their houses shall be made a dunghil, because there is no other God that can deliver after this sort
Daniel, iii 29.

7. Improperly in this sense. I was somewhat amiss yesterday, but am well to day.

8. Amiss is marked as an adverb, though it cannot always be adverbially removed, because it always follows the substantive to which

which it relates, contrary to the nature of adjectives in English; and though we say the action was amiss, we never say an amiss action.

9. Amiss is used by Shakespeare as a noun substantive.

To my sick soul, as sin's true nature is,
Each toy seems prologue to some great amiss Hamlet

AMI'SSION. n. f. [amissio, Lat.] Loss.

I'MIT. v. a. [amitto, Lat.] To lose; a word little in use.

Ice is water congealed by the frigidity of the air, whereby it acquireth no new form, but rather a consistence or determination of its diffluency, and amitteth not its essence, but consistency of fluidity. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii.

A'MITY. n. f. [amitié, Fr. amicitia, Lat.] Friendship, whether publick between nations, opposed to war, or among the people, opposed to discord, or between private persons.

The prophet David did think, that the very meeting of men together, and their accompanying one another to the house of God, should make the bond of their love insoluble, and tie them in a league of inviolable amity. Hooker, b. v. § 18.

The monarchy of Great Britain was in league and amity with all the world. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

You have a noble and a true conceit
Of godlike amity; which appears most strongly
In bearing thus the absence of your lord. Shak. Merch. of Ven.

And ye, oh Tyrians, with immortal hate
Pursue this race, this service dedicate
To my deplored ashes; let there be
'Twixt us and them no league nor amity. Sir John Denham.

AMMONIAC. n. f. The name of a drug.

GUM AMMONIAC is brought from the East Indies, and is supposed to ooze from an umbelliferous plant. Dioscorides says, it is the juice of a kind of ferula growing in Barbary, and the plant is called agasyllis. Pliny calls the tree metopion, which, he says, grows near the temple of Jupiter Ammon, whence the gum takes its name. It ought to be in dry drops, white within, yellowish without, easily fusible, resinous, somewhat bitter, and of a very sharp taste and smell, somewhat like garlick. This gum is said to have served the ancients for incense, in their sacrifices. It enters several medicinal compositions, as an attenuant and detergent, and, outwardly applied, it is resolutive and suppurative. Savary. Trevoux.

SAL AMMONIAC is a volatile salt of two kinds, ancient and modern. The ancient sort, described by Pliny and Dioscorides, was a native salt, generated in those large inns or caravanseras, where the crouds of pilgrims, coming from the temple of Jupiter Ammon, used to lodge; who, in those parts, travelling upon camels, and those creatures when in Cyrene, a province of Egypt, where that celebrated temple stood, urining in the stables, or, say some, in the parched sands, out of this urine, which is remarkably strong, arose a kind of salt, denominated sometimes from the temple, Ammoniac, and sometimes from the country, Cyrenaic. Since the cessation of these pilgrimages, no more of this salt is produced there; and, from this deficiency, some suspect there never was any such thing but this suspicion is removed, by the large quantities of a salt, nearly of the same nature, thrown out by mount Ætna. The characters of the ancient sal ammoniac are, that it cools water, turns aqua fortis into aqua regia, and consequently dissolves gold.

The modern sal ammoniac is entirely factitious, and made in Egypt, where several long-necked glass bottles, being filled with soot, a little sea salt, and the urine of cattle, and having their mouths luted with a piece of wet cotton, are placed over an oven or furnace, contrived for the purpose, in a thick bed of ashes, nothing but the necks appearing, and kept there two days and a night, with a continual strong fire. The steam swells up the cotton, and forms a paste at the vent-hole, hindering the salts from evaporating, which, being confined, stick to the top of the bottle, and are, upon breaking it, taken out in those large cakes, which they send to England. Only soot exhaled from dung, is the proper ingredient in this preparation; and the dung of camels affords the strongest and best.

Our chymists imitate the Egyptian sal ammoniac, by adding one part of common salt to five of urine; with which some mix that quantity of soot, and putting the whole in a vessel, they raise from it, by sublimation, a white, friable, farinaceous substance, which they call sal ammoniac. There are various preparations of this salt used in pharmacy; as, flowers of sal ammoniac, and flowers of sal ammoniac, used as sudorifics, or resolvents, and good aperients; volatile sal ammoniac, used against malignant fevers, as a sudorifick, and in pocket bottles; spirit of sal ammoniac, of various kinds. Chambers.

AMMONI'ACAL. adj [from ammoniac.] Having the properties of ammoniac salt.

Human blood calcin'd, yields no fixed salt, nor is it a sal ammoniack; for that remains immutable after repeated dissolutions; and distillation destroys the ammoniacal quality of animal salts, and turns them alkaline: so that it is a salt neither quite fixed, nor quite volatile, nor quite acid, nor quite alkaline, nor quite ammoniacal; but soft and benign, approaching nearest to the nature of sal ammoniac. Arbuthn.

AMMUNI'TION. n. f. [supposed by some to come from munitio, which, in the barbarous ages, seems to have signified supply of provision; but it, surely, may be more reasonably derived from munitio, fortification, chose à munitions, things for the fortresses.] Military stores.

They must make themselves defensible against strangers, and must have the assistance of some able military gent arms and ammunition for their defence.

The colonel came to put in the ammunition he brought with him; which was only twelve barrels of powder, and twelve hundred weight of match. Clarendon, b. viii.

All the rich mines of learning ransackt are,
To furnish ammunition for this war Denham.

But now his stores of ammunition spent,
His naked valour is his only guard
Rare thunders are from his dumb cannon sent,
And solitary guns are scarcely heard. Dryden's Annus Mir.

AMMUNI'TION BREAD. n. f. Bread for the supply of the armies or garrisons.

A'MNESTY. n. f. [ἀμνηστία.] An act of oblivion; an act by which crimes against the government, to a certain time, are so obliterated, that they can never be brought into charge.

I never read of a law enacted to take away the force of all laws, by which a man may safely commit upon the last of June, what he would infallibly be hanged for, if he committed it on the first of July, by which the greatest criminals may escape, provided they continue long enough in power, to antiquate their crimes, and, by shifting them a while, deceive the legislature to an amnesty. Swift.

AMNI'COLIST. n. f. [amnicola, Lat.] Inhabiting near a river. D.

AMNI'GENOUS. n. f. [amnigenus, Lat.] Born of a river. Dict.

A'MNION. } n. f. [Lat. perhaps from ἀμάω.]
A'MNIOS. }

The innermost membrane with which the foetus in the womb is most immediately covered, and with which the rest of the secundines, the chorion, and allantois, are ejected after birth. It is whiter and thinner than the chorion. It also contains a nutritious humour, separated by glands for that purpose, with which the foetus is preserved. It is outwardly cloathed with the urinary membrane, and the chorion, which sometimes stick so close to one another, that they can scarce be separated. It has also its vessels from the same origin as the chorion. Quincy.

AMO'MUM n. f. [Lat.] A sort of fruit.

The commentators on Pliny and Dioscorides differ about the ancient amomum; but the generality of them suppose it to be a fruit different from ours. Scaliger is confident, that the amomum was no fruit; but the wood, which bore some resemblance to a bunch of grapes, and was used in embalming of bodies; whence the name mummy was given to bodies embalmed with it. The modern amomum appears to be the fisan, or fium, of the ancients, or bastard stone-parsley. It resembles the muscat grape, grows in clusters, and is about the thickness of a pea, round, membranous, and divided into three cells, that contain several brown angular grains, of a very strong aromatick taste and smell. This fruit is brought from the East Indies, and makes part of the composition of treacle. It is of a hot spicy taste and smell. There is likewise another paler seed, named amomum; but neither are in much repute in physick.

Trevoux. Chambers.

AMO'NG.
AMO'NGST } prep. [amang, gemang, Saxon.]

1. Mingled with; placed with other persons or things; on every side.

Amongst strawberries sow here and there some borage-seed, and you shall find the strawberries under those leaves far more large than their fellows. Bacon's Natural Hist. N° 441.

The voice of God they heard,
Now walking in the garden, by soft winds
Brought to their ears, while day declin'd: they heard,
And from his presence hid themselves, among
The thickest trees, both man and wife. Paradise Lost

2. Conjoined with others, so as to make part of the number.

I have then, as you see, observed the failings of many great wits amongst the moderns, who have attempted to write an epic poem. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedicat.

There were, among the old Roman statues, several of Venus in different postures and habits, as there are many particular figures of her made after the same design Addison on Italy.

A'MORIST n. f. [from amour.] An inamorato; a gallant; a man professing love.

Female beauties are as fickle in their faces as their minds; though casualties should spare them, age brings in a necessity of decay, leaving doters upon red and white, perplexed by uncertainty both of the continuance of their mistress's kindness, and her beauty, both which are necessary to the amorist's joys and quiet Bovle.

AMOROSO n. f. [Ital.] A man enamoured T.

AMOROUS. adj [amoroso, Ital.]

1. In love, enamoured, with the particle of before the thing loved, in Shakespeare.

Sure, my brother is amorous on Hero, and hath withdrawn her father to break with him about it. Shakespeare's Much ado about nothing.

Apes, as soon as they have brought forth their young, keep their eyes fastened on them, and are never weary of admiring their beauty. So amorous is nature of whatsoever she produces.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. Naturally inclined to love; disposed to fondness; fond.

The am'rous master own'd her potent eyes,
Sigh'd when he look'd, and trembl'd as he drew,
Each flowing line confirm'd his first surprize,
And as the piece advanc'd, the passion grew. Pope.

3. Relating, or belonging to love.

I that am not shap'd for sportive tricks,
Nor made to court an am'rous looking-glass,
I, that am rudely stampt. Shakesp. Rich. III.

And into all things from her air inspir'd
The spirit of love, and amorous delight. Parad. Lost, b. VII.

[illegible] act
First caught they his'd, and each his lucing chose.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 586.

O! how I long my careless limbs to lay
Under the plantane's shade, and all the day
With am'rous airs my fancy entertain,
Invoke the muses, and improve my vein! Waller.

A'MOROUSLY. adv. [from amorous.] Fondly; lovingly.

When thou wilt swim in that Live-bath,
Each fish, which every channel hath,
Will amorously to thee swim,
Gladder to catch thee, than thou him. Donne.

A'MOROUSNESS. n. f. [from amorous.] The quality of being amorous; fondness; lovingness; love.

All Gynecia's actions were interpreted by Basilius, as proceeding from jealousy of his amorousness. Sidney, b. II.

I can readily believe that Lindamor has wit, and amorousness enough, to make him find it more easy to defend fair ladies, than to defend himself against them. Boyle on Colours.

AMORT adv. [a la mort, Fr.] In the state of the dead; dejected, depressed, spiritless.

How fares my Kate? what, sweeting, all amort?

Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

AMORTIZA'TION. } n. f. [amortissement, amortissable, Fr.] The AMO'RTIZEMENT. } right or act of transferring lands to mortmain; that is, to some community, that never is to cease.

Every one of the religious orders was confirmed by one pope or other; and they made an especial provision for them, after the laws of amortization were devised and put in use by princes.

Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

To AMO'RTIZE. v. a. [amortir, Fr.] To alien lands or tenements to any corporation, guild or fraternity, and their successors, which cannot be done without licence of the king, and the lord of the manour. Blount.

This did concern the kingdom to have farms sufficient to maintain an able body out of penury, and to amortize part of the lands unto the yeomanry, or middle part of the people.

Bacon's Henry VII.

To AMO'VE v. a. [amoveo, Lat.]

1. To remove from a post or station: a juridical sense.
2. To remove; to move; to alter: a sense now out of use.

Therewith, amoved from his sober mood,
And lives he yet, said he, that wrought this act?
And do the heavens afford him vital food? Fairy Queen.

To AMO'UNT. v. n. [monter, Fr.]

1. To rise to in the accumulative quantity; to compose in the whole; with the particle to. It is used of several sums in quantities added together.

Let us compute a little more particularly how much this will amount to, or how many oceans of water would be necessary to compose this great ocean rowling in the air, without bounds or banks. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. It is used, figuratively, of the consequence rising from any thing taken altogether.

The errours of young men are the ruin of business, but the errours of aged men amount but to this, that more might have been done, or sooner. Bacon's Essays Civil and Moral.

Judgments that are made on the wrong side of the danger, amount to no more than an affectation of skill, without either credit or effect. L'Estrange.

AMO'UNT n. f. [from To amount.] The sum total, the result of several sums or quantities accumulated.

And now, ye lying vanities of life,
Where are you now, and what is your amount?
Vexation, disappointment, and remorse. Thomson's Winter.

AMO'UR. n. f. [amour, Fr. amor, Lat.] An affair of gallantry, an intrigue, generally used of vicious love. The au sounds like oo in poor.

No man is of so general and diffusive a lust, as to prosecute his amours all the world over; and of it burn never so outrageously, yet the impure flame will either die of itself, or consume the body that harbours it. South's Sermons.

The restless youth search'd all the world around,
But how can Jove in his amours be found?

Addison's Ovid's Metam.

AMPER. n. f. [ampne, Sax.] A tumour, with inflammation, bile: a word said, by Skinner, to be much in use in Essex, but, perhaps, not found in books.

AMPHIBIOUS. adj. [ἀμφὶ and βίος.] That which partakes of two natures, so as to live in two elements, as, in air and water.

A creature of amphibious nature,
On land a beast, a fish in water. Hudibras, cant. II.

Those are called amphibious, which live freely in the air, upon the earth, and yet are observed to live long upon water, as if they were natural inhabitants of that element, though it be worth the examination to know, whether any of those creatures that live at that ease, and by choice, a good while, or at any time upon the earth, can live, a long time together, perfectly under water. Locke.

Fishes contain much oil, and amphibious animals participate somewhat of the nature of fishes, and are oily. Arbuthnot.

AMPHIBIOUSNESS. n. f. [from amphibious.] The quality of being able to live in different elements.

AMPHIBOLO'GICAL. adj. [from amphibology.] Doubtful.

AMPHIBOLO'GICALLY. adv. [from amphibological.] Doubtfully; with a doubtful meaning.

AMPHIBOLOGY. n. f. [ἀμφιβολογία.] Discourse of uncertain meaning. It is distinguished from equivocation, which means the double signification of a single word, as, noli regem accidere, temere bonum est, is amphibology; capiare leporem, meaning by lepores, either hares or eels, is equivocation.

Now the fallacies, whereby men deceive others, and are deceived themselves, the ancients have divided into verbal and real; of the verbal, and such as conclude from mistakes of the word, there are but two worthy our notation, the fallacy of equivocation and amphibology. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

In defining obvious appearances, we are to use what is most plain and easy, that the mind be not misled by amphibologies, or ill conceived notions, into fallacious deductions.

Granville's Scepsis Scientifica.

AMPHI'BOLOUS. adj. [ἀμφὶ and βάλλω.] Tolled from one to another; striking each way.

Never was there such an amphibolous quarrel, both parties declaring themselves for the king, and making use of his name in all their remonstrances, to justify their actions. Howell.

AMPHI'LOGY. n. f. [ἀμφὶ and λόγος.] Equivocation, ambiguity. D.

AMPHISBE'NA. n. f. [Lat. ἀμφισβαινα.] A serpent supposed to have two heads.

That the amphisbæna, that is, a smaller kind of serpent, which moveth forward and backward, hath two heads, or one at either extreme, was affirmed by Nicander, and others.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. III.

Scorpion, and asp, and amphisbæna dire,
Cerastes horn'd, hydrus, and elops drear,
And dipsas. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

AMPHISCII n. f. [Lat. ἀμφίσκιοι, of ἀμφὶ and σκιὰ, a shadow.] Those people dwelling in climates, wherein the shadows, at different times of the year, fall both ways, to the north pole, when the sun is in the southern signs, and to the south pole, when he is in the northern signs. These are the people who inhabit the torrid zone.

AMPHITHEATRE. n. f. [of ἀμφιθέατρον, of ἀμφὶ and θέατρον.] A building in a circular or oval form, having its area encompassed with rows of seats one above another, where spectators might behold spectacles, as stage-plays, or gladiators. The theatres of the ancients were built in the form of a semicircle, only exceeding a just semicircle by one fourth part of the diameter; and the amphitheatre is two theatres joined together; so that the longest diameter of the amphitheatre, was to the shortest, as one and a half to one.

Within, an amphitheatre appear'd
Rais'd in degrees, to sixty paces rear'd,
That when a man was plac'd in one degree,
Height was allow'd for him above to see. Dryd. Fables.

Conceive a man placed in the burning iron chair at Lyons, in the insults and mockeries of a crowded amphitheatre, and still keeping his seat; or stretched upon a grate of iron, over coals of fire, and breathing out his soul, among the exquisite sufferings of such a tedious execution, rather than renounce his religion, or blaspheme his Saviour. Addis on the Cor. Rev.

AMPLE. adj. [amplus, Lat.]

1. Large; wide; extended.

Heav'n descends
In universal hour
And fruits, and flowers, on nature's ample lap. Thomson.

2. Great in bulk.

Did your letters pierce the queen to any demonstration of grief?——

She took 'em, and read 'em in my presence,
And now and then an ample tear trill'd down
Her delicate cheeks. Shakesp. King Lear.

3. Unlimited, without restriction.

Have what you ask, your presents I receive,
Land where, and when you please, with ample leave. Dryd.

4. Liberal, large, without parsimony.

If we speak of strict justice, God could no way have been bound to require man's labours in so large and ample manner as human felicity doth import, in as much as the dignity of his excedeth so far the other's value. Hooker.

5. Large, splendid; without reservation.

To dispose the prince the more willingly to undertake his relief, the earl made ample promises, that, within so many days after the siege should be raised, he would advance his highness's levies with two thousand men. Clarendon, b.

6. Diffusive; not contracted; as, an ample narrative, that is, not an epitome.

A'MPLENESS. n. f. [from ample.] The quality of being ample, largeness, splendour.

Impossible it is for a person of my condition to produce any thing in proportion either to the ampleness of the body you represent, or of the places you bear. South.

To A'MPLIATE. v. a. [amplio, Lat.] To enlarge; to make greater; to extend.

He shall solemnly look upon it, not only to destroy ours, but to establish his own; not to traduce or extenuate, but to explain and dilucidate, to add and ampliate, according to the custom of the ancients. Brown's Preface to Vulgar Errours.

AMPLIATION. n. f. [from ampliate.]

1. Enlargement; exaggeration, extension.

Odious matters admit not of an ampliation, but ought to be restrained and interpreted in the mildest sense. Ayliffe's Parer

2. Diffuseness, enlargement.

The obscurity of the subject, and the prejudice and prepossession of most readers, may plead excuse for any ampliations or repetitions that may be found, whilst I labour to express myself plain and full. Holder's Elements of Speech, Preface.

To AMPLI'FICATE. v. a. [amplifico, Lat.] To enlarge; to spread out; to amplify. Dict.

AMPLIFICA'TION. n. f. [amplification, Fr. amplificatio, Lat.]

1. Enlargement, extension.

2. It is usually taken in a rhetorical sense, and implies exaggerated representation, or diffuse narrative; an image heightened beyond reality; a narrative enlarged with many circumstances.

I shall summarily, without any amplification at all, shew in what manner defects have been supplied. Sir J. Davies.

Things unknown seem greater than they are, and are usually received with amplifications above their nature.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b.

Is the poet justifiable for relating such incredible amplifications? It may be answered, if he had put these extravagances into the mouth of Ulysses, he had been unpardonable, but they suit well with the character of Alcinous. Pope's Od. notes.

A'MPLIFIER. n. f. [from To amplify.] One that enlarges any thing, one that exaggerates; one that represents any thing with a large display of the best circumstances, it being usually taken in a good sense.

Dorilaus could need no amplifier's mouth for the highest point of praise. Sidney, b. ii.

To AMPLIFY. v. a. [amplifier, Fr.]

1. To enlarge, to increase any material substance, or object of sense.

So when a great moneyed man hath divided his chests, and coins, and bags, he seemeth to himself richer than he was: and therefore a way to amplify any thing, is to break it, and to make anatomy of it in several parts, and to examine it according to the several circumstances. Bacon's Essays

All concaves that proceed from more narrow to more broad, do amplify the sound at the coming out. Bacon's Nat. History.

2. To enlarge, or extend any thing incorporeal.

For as the reputation of the Roman prelates grew up in these blind ages, so grew up in them withal, a desire of amplifying their power, that they might be as great in temporal forces, as mens opinions have formed them in spiritual matters. Raleigh.

3. To exaggerate any thing; to enlarge it by the manner of representation.

Since I have plainly laid open the negligence and errours of every age that is past, I would not willingly seem to flatter the present, by amplifying the diligence and true judgment of those servitours that have laboured in this vineyard. Davies on Ire.

Thy general is my lover, I have been
The book of his good acts; whence men have read
His fame unparalleled, haply amplified. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

4. To enlarge, to improve by new additions.

I feel age advancing, and my health is sufficient to increase and amplify these remarks, to confirm and improve these rules, and to illuminate the several pages. Watts

To AMPLIFY. v. n. Frequently with the particle on.

1. To speak largely in many words, to lay one's self out in diffusion.

When you affect to amplify on the former branches of a discourse, you will often lay a necessity upon yourself of contracting the latter, and prevent yourself in the most important part of your design. Watts's Logick.

2. To form large or pompous representations.

I have sometimes been forced to amplify on others, but here where the subject is so fruitful, that the harvest overcomes the reaper, I am shortened by my chain. Dryd. Fab. Ded.

Homer amplifies, not invents; and as there was really a people called Cyclopeans, so they might be men of great stature, or giants. Pope's Odyssey, notes.

A'MPLITUDE. n. f. [amplitude, Fr. amplitudo, Lat.]

1. Extent.

Whatever I look upon, within the amplitude of heaven and earth, is evidence of human ignorance. Glanville's Sceptis.

2. Largeness, greatness.

Men should learn how severe a thing the true inquisition of nature is, and accustom themselves, by the light of particulars, to enlarge their minds to the amplitude of the world, and not reduce the world to the narrowness of their minds. Bacon.

3. Capacity.

With more than human gifts from heaven adorn'd,
Perfections absolute, graces divine,
And amplitude of mind to greatest deeds Parad. Regained.

4. Splendour, grandeur; dignity.

In the great frame of kingdoms and commonwealths, it is in the power of princes, or estates, to add amplitude and greatness to their kingdoms. Bacon's Essays.

5. Copiousness, abundance.

You should say every thing which has a proper and direct tendency to this end; always proportioning the amplitude of your matter, and the fulness of your discourse, to your great design; the length of your time, to the convenience of your hearers. Watts's L...

6. Amplitude of the range of a projectile, denotes the horizontal l... [illegible] which it flies.

7. Amplitude, in astronomy, an arch of the horizon, intercepted between the true east and west point thereof, and the centre of the sun or star at its rising or setting. It is eastern or ortive, when the star rises, and western or occiduous, when the star sets. The eastern or western amplitude, are also called northern or southern, as they fall in the northern or southern quarters of the horizon.

8. Magnetical amplitude, is an arch of the horizon contained between the sun at his rising, and the east or west point of the compass, or, it is the difference of the rising or setting of the sun, from the east or west parts of the compass. Chambers.

AMPLY. adv. [ample, Lat.]

1. Largely; liberally.

For whose well being,
So amply, and with hands so liberal,
Thou hast provided all things. Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.

The evidence they had before was enough, amply enough, to convince them, but they were resolved not to be convinced and to those, who are resolved not to be convinced, all motives, all arguments are equal. Atterbury's Sermons.

2. At large, without reserve.

At return
Of him so lately promis'd to thy aid,
The woman's seed, obscurely then foretold,
Now ampler known, thy Saviour, and thy Lord. Par. Lost

3. At large, copiously; with a diffusive detail.

Some parts of a poem require to be amply written, and with all the force and elegance of words; others must be cast into shadows; that is, passed over in silence, or but faintly touched. Dryden's Dufresnoy, Pr.

To AMPUTATE. v. a. [amputo, Lat.] To cut off a limb: a word used only in chirurgery.

Amongst the cruizers in private frigates from Dunkirk, it was complained, that their surgeons were too active in amputating those fractured members. Wiseman's Surgery.

AMPUTATION. n. f. [amputatio, Lat.]

The operation of cutting off a limb, or other part of the body, with an instrument of steel. The usual method of performing it, in the instance of a leg, is as follows. The proper part for the operation being four or five inches below the knee, the skin and flesh are first to be drawn very tight upwards, and secured from returning by a ligature two or three fingers broad above this ligature another loose one is passed, for the gripe; which being twisted by means of a stick, may be straitened to any degree at pleasure. Then the patient being conveniently situated, and the operator placed to the inside of the limb, which is to be held by one assistant above, and another below the part designed for the operation, and the gripe sufficiently twisted, to prevent too large an hæmorrhage, the flesh is, with a stroke or two, to be separated from the bone with the amputating knife. Then the periosteum being also d... [illegible] back of the knife, saw the bone asunder, with as few strokes as possible. When two parallel bones are concerned, the flesh that grows between them must likewise be separated before the use of the saw. This being done, the gripe may be slackened, to give an opportunity of searching for the large blood vessels, and securing the haemorrhage at their mouths. After making proper applications to the stump, loosen the first ligature, and pull both the skin and the flesh, as far as conveniently may be, over the stump, to cover it, and secure them with the cross stitch made at the depth of half or three quarters of an inch in the skin. Then apply pledgets, astringents, plasters, and other necessaries. Chambers.

The Amazons, by the amputation of their right breast, had the freer use of their bow. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv.

A'MULET. n. f. [amulette, Fr. amuletum, Lat.] An appended remedy, remedy, or preservative a thing hung about the neck, or any other part of the body, for preventing or curing of some particular diseases.

A N A

That spirits are corporeal, seems at first view a concert derogative unto himself; yet herein he establisheth the doctrine of lustrations, amulets, and charms. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

They do not certainly know the falsity of what they report; and their ignorance must serve you as an amulet against the guilt both of deceit and malice. Government of the Tongue.

AMURCO'SITY n. f. [amurca, Lat.] The quality of lees or mother of any thing.

To AMU'SE. v. a. [amuser, Fr.]

1. To entertain with tranquillity; to fill with thoughts that engage the mind, without distracting it. To divert implies something more lively, and to please, something more important. It is therefore frequently taken in a sense bordering on contempt.

They think they see visions, and are arrived to some extraordinary revelations; when, indeed, they do but dream dreams, and amuse themselves with the fantastick ideas of a busy imagination. Decay of Piety.

I cannot think it natural for a man, who is much in love, to amuse himself with trifles. Walsh.

2. To draw on from time to time; to keep in expectation; as, he amused his followers with idle promises.

AMU'SEMENT. n. f. [amusement, Fr.] That which amuses; entertainment.

Every interest or pleasure of life, even the most trifling amusement, is suffered to postpone the one thing necessary. Rogers.

During his confinement, his amusement was to give poison to dogs and cats, and see them expire by slower or quicker torments. Pope's Eth. Epist. notes.

I was left to stand the battle, while others, who had better talents than a draper, thought it no unpleasant amusement to look on with safety, whilst another was giving them diversion, at the hazard of his liberty Swift.

AMU'SER. n. f. [amuseur, Fr.] He that amuses, as with false promises. The French word is always taken in an ill sense.

AMU'SIVE. adj. [from amuse.] That which has the power of amusing.

But amaz'd,
Beholds th' amusive arch before him fly,
Then vanish quite away. Thomson's Spring.

AMY'GDALATE. adj. [amygdala, Lat.] Made of almonds.

AMY'GDALINE. adj. [amygdala, Lat.] Relating to almonds; resembling almonds.

AN. article. [ane, Saxon, een, Dutch, eine, German.] The article indefinite, used before a vowel, or h mute. See A.

1 One, but with less emphasis; as, there stands a house
Since he cannot be always employed in study, reading, and conversation, there will be many an hour, besides what his exercises will take up. Locke.

2 Any, or some, as, an elephant might swim in this water.
He was no way at an uncertainty, nor ever in the least at a loss concerning any branch of it. Locke on St. Paul's Epistles
A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod,
An honest man's the noblest work of God. Pope.

3. Sometimes it signifies, like a, some particular state; but this is now disused.

It is certain, that odours do, in a small degree, nourish, especially the odour of wine; and we see men an hungred do love to smell hot bread. Bacon's Natural History.

4. An is sometimes, in old authours, a contraction of and if.

He can't flatter, he!
An honest man may like a knave, he must speak truth,
An they will take it so, if not, he's plain. Shakesp. K. Lear.

5 Sometimes a contraction of and before if.

Well I know
The clerk will ne'er wear hair on's face that had it
He will an' if he live to be a man.
Shakesp. Merchant of Venice

6. Sometimes it is a contraction of as if.

My next pretty correspondent, like Shakespeare's lion in Pyramus and Thisbe, roars an' it were any nightingale.
Addison. Guardian, N° 121.

ANA. adv. [ἀνά.] A word used in the prescriptions of physick, importing the like quantity, as, wine and honey, ā or ana ℥i., that is, of wine and honey each two ounces.

In the same weight prudence and innocence take,
Ana of each does the just mixture make. Cor.
He'll bring an apothecary, with a chargeable long bill
Dryden's Spanish Friar

ANA n. f. Books so called from the last syllables of their title, as, Scaligerana, Thuaniana; they are loose thoughts, or casual hints, dropped by eminent men, and collected by their friends.

ANACAMPTICK. adj. [ἀνακάμπτω.] Reflecting, or reflected as anacamptick sound, an echo, an anacamptick hill, a hill that produces an echo.

ANACAMPTICKS. n. f. The doctrine of reflected light, or catoptricks. It has no singular

ANACATHA'RTICK. n. f. [See CATHARTICK.] Any medicine that works upwards

ANACEPHALÆO'SIS. n. f. [ἀνακεφαλαίωσις.] Recapitulation; or summary of the principal heads of a discourse. Dict.

ANA'CHORETE. } n. f. [sometimes vicously written anchoret,
ANA'CHORITE. } ἀναχωρέτης.] A monk, who, with the leave of his superiour, leaves the convent for a more austere and solitary life.

Yet lies not love dead here, but here doth sit,
Vow'd to this trench, like an anchorite. Donne.

ANA'CHRONISM. n. f. [from ἀνὰ and χρόνος.] An errour in computing time, by which events are misplaced with regard to each other. It seems properly to signify an errour by which an event is placed too early, but is generally used for any errour in chronology.

This leads me to the defence of the famous anachronism, in making Æneas and Dido cotemporaries for it is certain, that the hero lived almost two hundred years before the building of Carthage. Dryden's Virgil, Dedicat

ANACLA'STICKS. n. f. [ἀνὰ and κλάω.] The doctrine of refracted light; dioptricks. It has no singular.

ANADIPLO'SIS. n. f. [ἀναδίπλωσις.] Reduplication, a figure in rhetorick, in which the last word of a foregoing member of a period becomes the first of the following, as, he retained his virtues amidst all his misfortunes, misfortunes touch only his virtue brought upon him

ANAGOGE'TICAL. adj. [ἀναγωγὸς.] That which contributes or relates to spiritual elevation, or religious raptures, mysterious; elevated above humanity. Dict.

ANAGO'GICAL. adj. [anagogique, Fr.] Mysterious; elevated, religiously exalted. Dict.

ANAGO'GICALLY adv. [from anagogical.] Mysteriously; with religious elevation.

ANAGRAM. n. f. [ἀνὰ and γράμμα.] A concert arising from the letters of a name transposed; as this, of William Noy, N. Noy, attorney general to Charles I. a very laborious man, I may! in law.

Though all her parts be not in th' usual place,
She hath yet the anagram of a good face:
If we might put the letters but one way,
In that lean dearth of words, what could we say? Donne
Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame
In keen iambicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.

ANAGRAMMATISM n. f. [from anagram.] The art or practice of making anagrams.

The only quintessence that hitherto the alchymy of wit could draw out of names, is anagrammatism, or metagrammatism, which is a dissolution of a name truly written into its letters, as its elements, and a new connexion of it by anagram, transposition, without addition, subtraction, or change of any letter into different words, making some perfect sense applicable to the person named. Camden.

ANAGRAMMATIST. n. f. [from anagram.] A maker of anagrams.

To ANAGRA'MMATIZE. v. n. [anagrammatiser, Fr.] To make anagrams.

ANALEPTICK. adj. [ἀναληπτικὸς.] Comforting, corroborating: a term of physick.

Analeptick medicines cherish the nerves, and renew the spirits and strength. Quincy.

ANALO'GICAL. adj. [from analogy.]

1. Used by way of analogy. It seems properly distinguished from analogous, as words from things; analogous signifies having relation, and analogical having the quality of representing relation.

It is looked on only as the image of the true God, and that not as a proper likeness, but by analogical representation.
Stillingfleet's Def. of Disc. on Rom. Idolatry.

When a word, which originally signifies any particular idea or object, is attributed to several other objects, not by way of resemblance, but on the account of some evident reference to the original idea, this is peculiarly called an analogical word; so a sound or healthy pulse, a sound digestion, sound sleep, are so called, with reference to a sound and healthy constitution; but if you speak of sound doctrine, or sound speech, this is by way of resemblance to health, and the words are metaphorical
Watts's Logick

2. Analogous; having resemblance or relation.

There is placed the minerals between the inanimate and vegetable provinces, participating something analogical to either
Hales's Origin of Mankind.

ANALO'GICALLY adv. [from analogical.] In an analogical manner, in an analogous manner

I am convinced, from the simplicity and uniformity of the Divine Nature, and of all his works, that there is some one principle, running through the whole system of creatures analogically, and congruous to their relative natures.
Cheyne's Philosoph. Principles

ANALOGICALNESS n. f. [from analogical.] The quality of being analogical; fitness to be applied for the illustration of some analogy.

ANA'LOGISM n. f. [ἀναλογισμὸς.] An argument from the cause to the effect

To ANA'LOGIZE v. a. [from analogy.] To explain by way of analogy,

A N A

analogy; to form some resemblance between different things; to consider something with regard to its analogy with somewhat else

We have systems of material bodies, diversly figured and situated, if separately considered; they represent the object of the desire, which is analogized by attraction or gravitation.

Cheyne's Philos. Principles.

ANA'LOGOUS. adj. [ἀνὰ and λόγος.]

1. Having analogy; bearing some resemblance or proportion; having something parallel.

Exercise makes things easy, that would be otherwise very hard; as, in labour, watchings, heats, and cold; and then there is something analogous in the exercise of the mind, to that of the body. It is folly and infirmity that makes us delicate and froward. L'Estrange.

Many important consequences may be drawn from the observation of the most common things, and analogous reasonings from the causes of them. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. It has the word to before the thing to which the resemblance is noted

This incorporeal substance may have some sort of existence, analogous to corporeal extension: though we have no adequate conception hereof. Locke.

ANALOGY. n. s. [ἀναλογία]

1. Resemblance between things with regard to some circumstances or effects; as, learning is said to enlighten the mind, that is, it is to the mind what light is to the eye, by enabling it to discover that which was hidden before.

From God it hath proceeded, that the church hath evermore held a prescript form of common prayer, although not in all things every where the same, yet, for the most part, retaining the same analogy. Hooker, b. v. § 25.

What I here observe of extraordinary revelation and prophecy, will, by analogy and due proportion, extend even to those communications of God's will, that are requisite to salvation South.

2. When the thing to which the analogy is supposed, happens to be mentioned, analogy has after it the particles to or with; when both the things are mentioned after analogy, the particle between or betwixt is used.

If the body politick have any analogy to the natural, an act of oblivion were necessary in a hot distemper'd state.

Dryd. Pref. to Aristæus and Achitop.

By analogy with all other liquours and concretions, the form of the chaos, whether liquid or concrete, could not be the same with that of the present earth. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

If we make him express the customs of our country, rather than of Rome, it is either when there was some analogy betwixt the customs, or to make him more easy to vulgar under-

Dryden's Juvenal, Dedic.

3. By grammarians, it is used to signify the agreement of several words in one common mode; as, from love is formed loved, from hate, hated, from grieve, grieved.

ANA'LYSIS. n. s. [ἀνάλυσις.]

1. A separation of a compound body into the several parts of which it consists.

There is an account of dew falling, in some places, in the form of butter, or grease, which grows extremely fetid; so that the analysis of the dew of any place, may, perhaps, be the best method of finding such contents of the soil as are within the reach of the sun. Arbuthnot

2. A consideration of any thing in parts, so as that one particular is first considered, then another

Analysis consists in making experiments and observations, and in drawing general conclusions from them by induction, and admitting of no objections against the conclusions, but such as are taken from experiments, or other certain truths.

Newton's Opticks.

3. A solution of any thing, whether corporeal or mental, to its first elements, as, of a sentence to the single words, of a compound word, to the particles and words which form it, of a tune, to single notes; of an argument, to simple propositions.

We cannot know any thing of nature, but by an analysis of its true initial causes; till we know the first springs of natural motions, we are still but ignorants. Glanville's Scepsis Scientif.

ANALY'TICAL. adj. [from analysis]

1. That which resolves any thing into first principles, that which separates any compound. See ANALYSIS.

Either may be probably maintained against the inaccurateness of the analytical experiments vulgarly relied on. Boyle.

2. That which proceeds by analysis, or by taking the parts of a compound into distinct and particular consideration.

Descartes hath here infinitely outdone all the philosophers that went before him, in giving a particular and analytical account of the universal fabrick, yet he intends his principles but for hypotheses. Glanville's Scepsis Scientifica.

ANALY'TICALLY. adv. [from analytical.] In such a manner as separates compounds into simples. See ANALYSIS.

ANALY'TICK. adj. [ἀναλυτικὸς.] The manner of resolving compounds into the simple constituent or component parts, applied chiefly to mental operations.

He was in logick a great critick,
Profoundly skill'd in analytick.

Analytick method takes the whole compound as it finds it, whether it be a species or an individual, and leads us into the knowledge of it, by resolving into its first principles, or parts, [illegible] nature, and its special properties; and therefore it is called the method of resolution. Watts's Logick

To ANALYZE. v. a. [ἀνάλυω.] To resolve a compound into its first principles See ANALYSIS.

Chymistry enabling us to depurate bodies, and, in some measure, to analyze them, and take asunder their heterogeneous parts, in many chymical experiments, we may, better than in others, know what manner of bodies we employ; art having made them more simple or uncompounded, than nature alone is wont to present them us. Boyle.

To analyze the immorality of any action into its last principles, if it be inquired, why such an action is to be avoided, the immediate answer is, because it is sin. Norris's Miscell.

When the sentence is distinguished into subject and predicate, proposition, argument, act, object, cause, effect, ad unct, opposite, &c. then it is analyzed analogically and metaphysically. This last is what is chiefly meant in the theological schools, when they speak of analyzing a text of scripture.

Watts's Logick

ANALYZER. n. s. [from To analyze.] That which has the power of analyzing.

Particular reasons incline me to doubt, whether the fire be the true and universal analyzer of mixt bodies. Boyle.

ANAMORPHOSIS. n. s. [ἀνὰ and μορφόω.] Deformation; a perspective projection of any thing, so that to the eye, at one point of view, it shall appear deformed, in another, an exact and regular representation. Sometimes it is made to appear confused to the naked eye, and regular, when viewed in a mirrour of a certain form.

ANANAS. n. s. The pine apple.

It has a flower consisting of one leaf, divided into three parts, and funnel-shaped; the embryos produced in the tubercles, afterwards become fruit, the seeds in the tubercles are small, and almost kidney-shaped

The species are, 1. Oval-shaped pine apple, with a whitish flesh. 2. Pyramidal pine apple, with a yellow flesh. 3. Pine apple, with smooth leaves. 4. Pine apple, with shining green leaves, and scarce any spines on their edges. 5. The olive-coloured pine.

The first sort is most common in Europe, but the fruit of the second is larger, better flavoured, and its juice not so astringent. The fifth sort is the most rare in Europe, but esteemed above all the rest. These plants are propagated by suckers; and from the crowns which grow on the top of the fruit. Mill.

Witness thou best ananas, thou the pride
Of vegetable life, beyond whate'er
The poets imag'd in the golden age. Thomf. Summer.

ANANAS, wild. The same with penguin. See PENGUIN

ANAPHORA. n. s. [ἀναφορὰ.] A figure, when several clauses of a sentence are begun with the same word, or found, as,—Where is the wise? Where is the scribe? Where is the disputer of this world?

ANAPLERO'TICK. adj. [ἀναπληρόω.] That which fills up any vacuity; used of applications which promote flesh.

A'NARCH. n. s. [See ANARCHY.] An author of confusion.

Him thus the anarch old,
With fault'ring speech, and visage incompos'd,
Answer'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

ANA'RCHICAL. adj. [from anarchy.] Confused, without rule or government.

In this anarchical and rebellious state of human nature, the faculties belonging to the material world presume to determine the nature of subjects belonging to the supreme Spirit.

Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

A'NARCHY. n. s. [ἀναρχία.] Want of government; a state in which every man is unaccountable, a state without magistracy

Where eldest night
And chaos, ancestors of nature, hold
Eternal anarchy, amidst the noise
Of endless wars, and by confusion stand. Paradise Lost

Arbitrary power is but the first natural step from anarchy, or the savage life, the adjusting power and freedom being an effect and consequence of maturer thinking. Swift

ANASARCA. n. s. [from ἀνὰ and σὰρξ.] A sort of dropsy, where the whole substance is stuffed with pituitous humours. Quincy.

When the lympha stagnates, or is extravasated under the skin, it is called an anasarca. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ANASARCOUS. adj. [from anasarca.] Relating to an anasarca, partaking of the nature of an anasarca.

A gentlewoman laboured of an ascites, with an anasarcous swelling on her belly, thighs, and legs. Wiseman.

ANASTOMA'TICK. adj. [from ἀνὰ and στόμα.] That which has the quality of opening the vessels, or of removing obstructions.

ANASTOMOSIS. n. s. [from ἀνὰ and στόμα.] The inoculation of vessels, or the opening of one vessel into another, as, of the arteries into the veins.

ANASTROPHE. n. f. [ἀναστροφὴ, a prepofterous placing, from ἀναστρέφω.] A figure whereby words which fhould have been precedent, are poftponed.

ANATHEMA. n. f. [ἀνάθεμα]

1. A curfe pronounced by eccleſiaſtical authority, excommunication.

   Her bare anathemas fall but like ſo many brutа fulmina upon the ſchiſmatical, who think themſelves ſhrewdly hurt, forſooth, by being cut off from the body, which they chooſe not to be of. South's Sermons.

2. The object of the curſe, or perſon curſed. This ſeems the original meaning, though now little uſed.

ANATHEMA'TICAL. adj. [from anathema.] That which has the properties of an anathema; that which relates to an anathema.

ANATHEMA'TICALLY adv. [from anathematical.] In an anathematical manner.

To ANATHE'MATIZE v. a. [from anathema.] To pronounce accurſed by eccleſiaſtical authority, to excommunicate.

They were therefore to be anathematized after this manner, and, with deteſtation, branded and baniſhed out of the church.

ANATI'FEROUS. adj. [from anas and fero, Lat.] Producing ducks.

If there be anatiferous trees, whoſe corruption breaks forth into barnacles, yet, if they corrupt, they degenerate into maggots, which produce not them again. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ation of intereſt upon intereſt, the adding of the intereſt due for money lent, to the original ſum. A ſpecies of uſury generally forbidden.

ANATOMICAL. adj. [from anatomy.]

1. Relating or belonging to anatomy.

   When we are taught by logick to view a thing completely in all its parts, by the help of diviſion, it has the uſe of an anatomical knife, which diſſects an animal body, and ſeparates the veins, arteries, nerves, muſcles, membranes, &c. and ſhews us the ſeveral parts which go to the compoſition of a complete animal. Watts's Logick.

2. Proceeding upon principles taught in anatomy, conſidered as the object of anatomy.

   There is a natural, involuntary diſtortion of the muſcles, which is the anatomical cauſe of laughter; but there is another cauſe of laughter, which decency requires. Swift.

3. Anatomized; diſſected; ſeparated.

   The continuation of ſolidity is apt to be confounded with, and, if we will look into the minute anatomical parts of matter, is little different from, hardneſs. Locke.

ANATOMICALLY. adv. [from anatomical.] In an anatomical manner, in the ſenſe of an anatomiſt; according to the doctrine of anatomy.

   While ſome affirmed it had no gall, intending only thereby no evidence of anger or fury, others have conſtrued anatomically, and denied that part at all. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii.

ANA'TOMIST. n. ſ. [ἀνατομὴ.] He that ſtudies the ſtructure of animal bodies, by means of diſſection, he that divides the bodies of animals, to diſcover the various parts.

   Anatomiſts adjudged, that if nature had been ſuffered to run her own courſe, without this fatal interruption, he might have doubled his age. Howel's Vienna Foreſt.

   Hence when anatomiſts diſcourſe,
   How like brutes organs are to ours,
   They grant, if higher powers think fit,
   A bear might ſoon be made a wit,
   And that, for any thing in nature,
   Pigs might ſqueak love odes, dogs bark ſtarre. Prior.

To ANATOMIZE. v. a. [ἀνατέμνω.]

1. To diſſect an animal, to divide the body into its component or conſtituent parts.

   Our induſtry muſt even anatomize every particle of that body, which we are to uphold. Hooker, Dedicat.

2. To lay any thing open diſtinctly, and by minute parts.

   I ſpeak but brotherly of him, but ſhould I anatomize him to thee as he is, I muſt bluſh and weep, and then muſt look pale and wonder. Shakeſpeare's As you like it.

   Then dark diſtinctions reaſon's right diſguiſed,
   And into atoms trash anatomized. Denham.

ANATOMY. n. ſ. [ἀνατομὴ.]

1. The art of diſſecting the body.

   It is therefore in the anatomy of the mind, as in that of the body, more good will accrue to mankind, by attending to the large, open, and perceptible parts, than by ſtudying too much ſuch inner nerves and veſſels, as will for ever eſcape our obſervation. Pope's Eſſay on Man, Pre.

2. The doctrine of the ſtructure of the body, learned by diſſection.

   Let the muſcles be well inſerted and bound together, according to the knowledge of them which is given us by anatomy. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

3. The act of dividing any thing, whether corporeal or intellectual.

   When a married man hath divided his cheſts, he ſeemeth to himſelf richer than he was, therefore, a way to amplify any thing, is to break it, and to make anatomy of it in ſeveral parts.

4. The body ſtripped of its integuments, a ſkeleton.

   O that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth,
   Then with a paſſion I would ſhake the world,
   And rouze from ſleep that fell anatomy,
   Which cannot hear a feeble lady's voice. Shakeſp. K. John.

5. By way of irony or ridicule, a thin meagre perſon.

   They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-faced villain,
   A mere anatomy, a mountebank,
   A threadbare juggler, and a fortune-teller,
   A needy hollow-eyed, ſharp-looking wretch,
   A living dead man. Shakeſpeare's Comedy of Errours.

ANATRON. n. ſ. The ſcum which ſwims upon the molten glaſs in the furnace, which, when taken off, melts in the air, and then coagulates into common ſalt. It is likewiſe that ſalt which gathers upon the walls of vaults.

ANBURY. n. ſ. See ANBURY.

ANCESTOR. n. ſ. [anceſtor, Lat. anceſtre, Fr.] One from whom a perſon deſcends, either by the father or the mother. It is diſtinguiſhed from predeceſſor, which is not, like anceſtor, a natural, but civil denomination. An hereditary monarch ſucceeds to his anceſtors, an elective, to his predeceſſors.

   And ſhe lies buried with her anceſtors,
   O, in a tomb where never ſcandal ſlept,
   Save this of hers. Shakeſp. Much ado about Nothing.

   Cham was the paternal anceſtor of Ninus, the father of Chus, the grandfather of Nimrod; whoſe ſon was Belus, the father of Ninus. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

   Obſerve! why pr'ythee what am I? I know
   My father, grandſire, and great grandſire too.
   If farther I derive my pedigree,
   I can but gueſs beyond the fourth degree.
   The reſt of my forgotten anceſtors,
   Were ſons of earth like him, or ſons of whores.
   Dryden's Perſius, ſat. vi.

ANCESTREL. adj. [from anceſtor.] Claimed from anceſtors, relating to anceſtors: a term of law.

   Limitation in actions anceſtrel, was anciently ſo here in England. Hale's Law of England.

A'NCESTRY. n. ſ. [from anceſtor.]

1. Lineage; a ſeries of anceſtors, or progenitors; the perſons who compoſe the lineage.

   Phedon I hight, quoth he; and do advance
   Mine anceſtry from famous Coradin,
   Who firſt to raiſe our houſe to honour did begin. Fairy Q.

   A tenacious adherence to the rights and liberties tranſmitted from a wiſe and virtuous anceſtry, publick ſpirit, and a love of one's country, are the ſupport and ornaments of government. Addiſon's Freeholder, N° 5.

   Say from what ſcepter'd anceſtry ye claim,
   Recorded eminent in deathleſs fame? Pope's Odyſſey.

2. The honour of deſcent, birth.

   Title and anceſtry render a good man more illuſtrious, but an ill one, more contemptible. Addiſon. Guardian, N° 123.

ANCHENTRY. n. ſ. [from ancient, and therefore properly to be written ancientry.] Antiquity of a family, ancient dignity; appearance or proof of antiquity.

   Wooing, wedding, and repenting, is a Scotch jig, a meaſure and a cinque pace, the firſt foot is hot and haſty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantaſtical; the wedding mannerly modeſt, as a meaſure full of ſtate and anchentry, and then comes repentance, and with his bad legs falls into the cinque pace faſter and faſter, till he ſinks into his grave. Shakeſp. Much ado about Nothing.

ANCHOR. n. ſ. [anchora, Lat.]

1. A heavy iron, compoſed of a long ſhank, having a ring at one end to which the cable is faſtened, and at the other, branching out into two arms or flooks, tending upwards, with barbs or edges on each ſide. Its uſe is to hold the ſhip, by being fixed to the ground.

   He ſaid, and wept, then ſpread his ſails before
   The winds, and reach'd at length the Cuman ſhore:
   Their anchors dropt, his crew the veſſels moor. Dryd. Æn.

2. It is uſed, by a metaphor, for any thing which confers ſtability or ſecurity.

   Which hope we have as an anchor of the ſoul, both ſure and ſtedfaſt, and which entereth into that within the veil. Hebrews, vi. 19.

3. The forms of ſpeech in which it is moſt commonly uſed, are, to caſt anchor, to lye or ride at anc

   The Turkiſh general, deceived of his expectations, and perceiving that the Rhodians would not be drawn forth to battle at ſea, withdrew his fleet, when caſting anchor, and landing his men, he burnt the corn. Knolles's Hiſtory of the Turks.

   Entering with the tide
   He dropp'd his anchors, and his cables ply'd:
   Furl'd every ſail, and drawing down the maſt,
   His veſſel moor'd, and made with cables faſt. Dryd. Homer.

Far from your capital my ſhip reſides
At Reithrus, and ſecure at anchor rides Pope's Odyſſey.

To A'NCHOR v. n. [from anchor]

1. To caſt anchor, to lie at anchor
The fiſhermen that walk upon the beach
Appear like mice, and yon tall anchoring bark
Diminiſh'd to her cock; her cock, a buoy
Almoſt too ſmall for ſight. Shakeſp. King Lear.
Near Calais the Spaniards anchored, expecting their land forces, which came not. Bacon.
Or the ſtrait courſe to rocky Chios plow,
And anchor under Mimas' ſhaggy brow Pope's Odyſſey.

2. To ſtop at; to reſt on.
My intention, hearing not my tongue,
Anchors on Iſabel. Shakeſp.
My tongue ſhould to my eare not name my boys,
'Till that my nails were anchor'd in thine eyes. Shak. R. III.

A'NCHOR. n. ſ. Shakeſpeare ſeems to have uſed this word for anchoret, or an abſtemious recluſe perſon.
To deſperation turn my truſt and hope!
An anchor's cheer in priſon be my ſcope! Shakeſp. Hamlet

A'NCHOR-HOLD. n. ſ. [from anchor and hold.] The hold or faſtneſs of the anchor; and, figuratively, ſecurity
The old Engliſh could expreſs moſt aptly all the concepts of the mind in their own tongue, without borrowing from any; as for example: the holy ſervice of God, which the Latins called religion, becauſe it knitted the minds of men together, and moſt people of Europe have borrowed the name from them, they called moſt ſignificantly ean-faſtneſs, as the one and only aſſurance and faſt anchor-hold of our ſouls health. Camden.

A'NCHOR SMITH. n. ſ. [from anchor and ſmith.] The maker or forger of anchors.
Sm thing comprehends all trades, which uſe either forge or file, from the anchor-ſmith to the watchmaker; they all working by the ſame rules, though not with equal exactneſs, and all uſing the ſame tools, though of ſeveral ſizes.
Moxon's Mechanical Exerciſe

A'NCHORAGE. n. ſ. [from anchor]

1. The hold of the anchor
Let me reſolve whether there be indeed ſuch efficacy in nurture and firſt production; for if that ſuppoſal ſhould fail us, all our anchorage were looſe, and we ſhould but wander in a wild ſea. Wotton.

2. The ſet of anchors belonging to a ſhip.
Lo as the bark that hath diſcharg'd her freight,
Returns with precious lading to the bay
From whence at firſt ſhe weigh'd her anchorage;
Cometh Andronicus. Shakeſp. Titus Andronicus.

3. The duty paid for the liberty of anchoring in a port.

A'NCHORED participial adj. [from To anchor.] Held by the anchor
Like a well twiſted cable, holding faſt
The anchor'd veſſel in the loudeſt blaſt. Waller

A'NCHORET. } n. ſ. [contracted from anachoret, ἀναχωρήτης] A
A'NCHORITE } recluſe, a hermit, one that retires to the more ſevere duties of religion.
His poetry indeed he took along with him, but he made that an anchorite as well as himſelf. Sprat
You deſcribe ſo well your hermitical ſtate of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you, for a cave in a rock, with a fine ſpring, or any of the accommodations that befit a ſolitary life. Pope's Letters.

A'NCHOVY. n. ſ. [from anchova, Span. or anchoa, Ital. of the ſame ſignification.] A little ſea-fiſh, much uſed by way of ſauce, or ſeaſoning. Scaliger deſcribes the anchovy as of the herring kind, about the length of a finger, having a pointed ſnout, a wide mouth, no teeth, but gums as rough as a ſaw. Others make it a ſort of ſardine, or pilchard, but others, with better reaſon, hold it a peculiar ſpecies, very different from either. It is caught in the months of May, June, and July, on the coaſts of Catalonia, Provence, &c. when it conſtantly repairs up the Straits of Gibraltar into the Mediterranean. The fiſhing is chiefly in the night time, when a light being put on the ſtern of their little fiſhing veſſels, the anchovies flock round, and are caught in nets. When the fiſhery is over, they cut off the heads, take out the galls and guts, then lay them in barrels, and ſalt them Savary.
We invent new ſauces and pickles, which reſemble the animal ferment in taſte and virtue, as the falſo-acid gravies of meat, the ſalt pickles of fiſh, anchovies, oyſters.

ANGEL. n. ſ. [ἄγγελος; angelus, Lat.]

1. Originally a meſſenger. A ſpirit employed by God in the adminiſtration of human affairs.

Some holy angel
Fly to the court of England, and unfold
His meſſage ere he come. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

Had we ſuch a knowledge of the conſtitution of man, as is poſſible angels have, and it is certain his Maker has; we ſhould have a quite other idea of his eſſence. Locke.

See HIERARCHY.

2. Angel is ſometimes uſed in a bad ſenſe, as, angels of darkneſs.

And they had a king over them, which was the angel of the bottomleſs pit.

3. Angel, in ſcripture, ſometimes means man of God, prophet.
4. Angel is uſed, in the ſtile of love, for a beautiful perſon.

Heav'n bleſs thee!
Thou haſt the ſweeteſt face I ever look'd on.
Sir, as I have a ſoul, ſhe is an angel. Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

5. A piece of money anciently coined and impreſſed with an angel, in memory of an obſervation of Pope Gregory, that the pagan angli, or Engliſh, were ſo beautiful, that, if they were chriſtians, they would be angeli, or angels. The coin was rated at ten ſhillings.

Take an empty baſon, put an angel of gold, or what you will, into it, then go ſo far from the baſon, till you cannot ſee the angel, becauſe it is not in a right line, then fill the baſon with water, and you will ſee it out of its place, becauſe of the reflect on. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 712.

Couſin, away for England, haſte before,
And, ere our coming, ſee thou ſhake the bags
Of hoarding abbots; their impriſon'd angels
Set thou at liberty. Shakeſpeare's King John.

ANGELIC. adj. Reſembling angels, angelical.

I have mark'd
A thouſand bluſhing apparitions
To ſtart into her face, a thouſand innocent ſhames
In angel whiteneſs bear away thoſe bluſhes.

ANGE'LICA. n. ſ [Lat. ab angelica virtute.] The name of a plant.

It has winged leaves divided into large ſegments; its ſtalks are hollow and jointed; the flowers grow in an umbel upon the tops of the ſtalks, and conſiſt of five leaves, ſucceeded by two large channelled ſeeds.

The ſpecies are, 1. Common or manured angelica. 2. Greater wild angelica. 3. Shining Canada angelica. 4. Mountain perennial angelica, with columbine leaves.

The common angelica delights to grow in a very moiſt ſoil, and its ſeeds ſhould be ſown ſoon after it is ripe. This plant is uſed in medicine, as are its ſeeds; and the confectioners make a ſweetmeat with its tender ſtalks, cut in May. The ſecond ſort grows wild, and the two laſt ſorts may be propagated like the firſt. Miller.

ANGE'LICA. (Berry-bearing) [Arabia, Lat.]

The flower conſiſts of many leaves, expanding in form of a roſe, which are naked, growing on the top of the ovary. Theſe flowers are ſucceeded by globular fruit, which are ſoft and ſucculent, and full of oblong ſeeds.

The ſpecies are, 1. Canada berry-bearing angelica. 2. Berry-bearing angelica, with a naked ſtalk and creeping root. 3. Angelica tree.

The two firſt are propagated either by ſowing their ſeeds, or by parting of the roots. The third ſort grows with us to the height of ſeven or eight feet, and is only propagated by ſeeds, which are frequently brought from America. Miller.

ANGE'LICAL. adj. [angelicus, Lat.]

1. Reſembling angels.

It diſcovereth unto us the glorious works of God, and carrieth up, with an angelical ſwiftneſs, our eyes, that our mind, being informed of his viſible marvels, may conſtantly travel upward. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

2. Partaking of the nature of angels.

Others more mild
Retreated in a ſilent valley, ſang
With notes angelical to many a harp,
Their own heroick deeds, and hapleſs fall,
By doom of battle. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b.

3. Belonging to angels.

Some emanation of th' all beauteous mind. Pope. Eloiſa to Abel.

A'NGELOT. n. ſ. A muſical inſtrument, ſomewhat reſembling a lute. Ainſ.

ANGER. n. ſ [a word of no certain etymology, but, with moſt probability, derived by Skinner from ange, Sax. vexed, which however, ſeems to come originally from the Latin ango.]

1. Anger is uneaſineſs or diſcompoſure of the mind, upon the receipt of any injury, with a preſent purpoſe of revenge. Locke.

Anger is like
A full hot horſe, who being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him. Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

Was the Lord diſpleaſed againſt the rivers? was thine anger againſt the rivers? was thy wrath againſt the ſea, that thou didſt ride upon thine horſes and thy chariots of ſalvation? Hab. iii. 8.

Anger is, according to ſome, a tranſient hatred, or at leaſt very like it. South.

2. Pain, or ſmart, of a ſore or ſwelling. In this ſenſe it ſeems plainly deducible from anger.

I made the experiment, ſetting the moxa where the firſt violence of my pain began, and where the greateſt anger and ſoreneſs ſtill continued, notwithſtanding the ſwelling of my foot. Temple's Miſcellanies.

To A'NGER. v. a. [from the noun.] To make angry, to provoke; to enrage.

Who would anger the meaneſt artiſan, which carrieth a good mind? Hooker, b. iv. § 12.

Sometimes he angers me,
With telling me of the moldwarp and the ant.
Shakeſp. Henry IV. p. i.

There were ſome late taxes and impoſitions introduced, which rather angered than grieved the people. Clarendon.

It anger'd Turenne, once upon a day,
To ſee a footman kick'd that took his pay. Pope's Dial. ii.

A'NGERLY. adv. [from anger.] In an angry manner, like one offended.

Why, how now, Hecat, you look angerly. Shak. Macbeth.

A'NGLE. n. ſ. [angel, Germ. and Dutch.] An inſtrument to take fiſh, conſiſting of a rod, a line, and a hook.

She alſo had an angle in her hand; but the taker was ſo taken, that ſhe had forgotten taking. Sidney.

Give me mine angle, we'll to the river there,
My muſick playing far off, I will betray
Tawny finn'd fiſh, my bended hook ſhall pierce
Their ſlimy jaws. Shakeſp. Antony and Cleopatra.

The patient fiſher takes his ſilent ſtand,
Intent, his angle trembling in his hand,
With looks unmov'd, he hopes the ſcaly breed,
And eyes the dancing cork, and bending reed. Pop. Windſ.

To A'NGLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To fiſh with a rod and hook.

The ladies angling in the cryſtal lake,
Feaſt on the waters with the prey they take. Waller.

This ſeeming brow of j[illegible]
The hearts of all that he did angle for Shak. Henry IV.

The pleaſant'ſt angling is to ſee the fiſh
Cut with her golden oars the ſilver ſtream,
And greedily devour the treacherous bait,
So angle we for Beatrice. Shak. Much ado about Nothing.

ANGLE-ROD. n. ſ. [angel-roede, Dutch.] The ſtick to which the line and hook are hung.

It differeth much in greatneſs, the ſmalleſt being fit for thatching of houſes; the ſecond ſort is uſed for angle-rods, and, in China, for beating of offenders upon the thighs. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 656.

He makes a May-fly to a miracle, and furniſhes the whole country with angle-rods. Addiſon. Spectator, N° 103.

A'NGLER. n. ſ. [from angle.] He that fiſhes with an angle.

He, like a patient angler, ere he ſtrook,
Would let them play a while upon the hook. Dryden.

Neither do birds alone, but many ſorts of fiſhes, feed upon inſects, as is well known to anglers, who bait their hooks with them. Ray on the Creation.

A'NGLICISM. n. ſ. [from Anglus, Lat.] A form of ſpeech peculiar to the Engliſh language, an Engliſh idiom.

ANGOBER. n. ſ. A kind of pear. See PEAR.

A'NGRILY. adv. [from angry.] In an angry manner, furiouſly, peeviſhly.

I will ſit as quiet as a lamb,
I will not ſtir, nor wince, nor ſpeak a word,
Nor look upon the iron angerly. Shakeſp. King John.

A'NGRY. adj. [from anger.]

1. Touched with anger; provoked.

Oh let not the Lord be angry, and I will ſpeak peradventure there ſhall be thirty found there. Gen. xviii. 30.

It ſeems properly to require, when the object of anger is mentioned, the particle at before a thing, and with before a perſon, but this is not always obſerved.

Your Coriolanus is not much miſſed, but with his friends; the commonwealth doth ſtand, and ſo would do, were he more angry at it. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

Now therefore be not grieved, nor angry with yourſelves, that ye ſold me hither: for God did ſend me before you to preſerve life. Gen. xlv. 5.

I think it a vaſt pleaſure, that whenever two people of merit regard one another, ſo many ſcoundrels envy and are angry at them. Stuff.

3. Having the appearance of anger; having the effect of anger.

The north wind driveth away rain: ſo doth an angry countenance a backbiting tongue. Prov. xxv. 23.

4. In chirurgery, painful, inflamed, ſmarting.

This ſerum, being accompanied by the thinner parts of the blood, grows red and angry, and, wanting its due [illegible] the maſs, firſt gathers into a hard ſwelling, and [illegible] ripens into matter, and ſo diſcharges. Wiſeman's Surgery.

A'NGUISH. n. ſ. [angoiſſe, Fr. anger, Lat.] Exceſſive pain [illegible] of mind or body; applied to the mind, it means the pain of ſorrow, and is ſeldom uſed to ſignify other paſſions.

Not all ſo cheerful ſeemed the of ſight,
As was her ſiſter, whether dread did dwell,
Or anguiſh in her heart, is hard to tell. Fairy Queen, b. [illegible]

By occaſion waked, and circumſtant ill,
True virtue's foes, always in all deeds ill. Donne.

They had perſecutors, whoſe invention was as great as their cruelty. Wit and malice conſpired to find out ſuch deaths, and thoſe of ſuch inured to anguiſh, that only the manner of dying was the puniſhment, death itſelf the deliverance. South.

Perpetual anguiſh fills his anxious breaſt,
Not ſtopt by buſineſs, nor compoſed by reſt;
No muſick cheers him, nor no feaſt can pleaſe. Dryd. Juv.

A'NGUISHED. adj. [from anguiſh.] Seized with anguiſh, tortured, exceſſively pained.

Feel no touch
Of conſcience, but of fame, and be
Anguiſh'd, not that 'twas ſin, but that 'twas ſhe. Donne.

A'NGULAR. adj. [from angle.] Having angles or corners; cornered.

As for the figure of cryſtal, it is for the moſt part hexagonal, or ſix cornered, being built upon a confuſed matter, from whence, as it were from a root, angular figures ariſe, even [illegible] in the amethyſt and baſaltes. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The diſtance of the edges of the knives from one another, at the diſtance of four inches from the angular point, where the edges of the knives meet, was the eight part of an inch. Newton's Optick.

ANI[illegible]
3. Reproof, ſevere cenſure, blame.

He diſmiſſed their commiſſioners with ſevere and ſharp animadverſions.

2. Perceit. When the object of animadverſion is mentioned, it has the particle on or upon before.

When a bill is debating in parliament, it is uſual to have the controverſy handled by pamphlets on both ſides; without the leaſt animadverſion upon the authours. Swift

3. In law.

An eccleſiaſtical cenſure, and an eccleſiaſtical animadverſion, are different things; for a cenſure has a relation to a ſpiritual puniſhment, but an animadverſion has only a reſpect to a temporal one; as, degradation, and the delivering the perſon over to the ſecular court. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici

ANIMADVE'RSIVE. adj. [from animadvert.] That has the power of judging.

The repreſentation of objects to the ſoul, the only animadverſive principle, are conveyed by motions made on the immediate organs of ſenſe. Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica, c. 17.

ANIMADVE'RSIVENESS. n. ſ. [from animadverſive.] The power of animadverting, or making judgment. Dict.

To ANIMADVERT. v. n. [animadverto, Lat.]

1. To paſs cenſures upon.

I ſhould not animadvert on him, who was otherwiſe a painful obſerver of the decorum of the ſtage, if he had not uſed extreme ſeverity in his judgment of the incomparable Shakeſpeare for that fault. Dryden on Dramatick Poeſy

2. To inflict puniſhments. In both ſenſes with the particle upon.

If the Authour of the univerſe animadverts upon men here below, how much more will it become him to do ſo upon their entrance into a higher ſtate of being. Grew's Coſmolog. Sacra

ANIMADVERTER. n. ſ. [from animadvert.] He that paſſes cenſures, or inflicts puniſhments.

God is a ſtrict obſerver of, and a ſevere animadverter upon, ſuch as preſume to partake of thoſe myſteries, without ſuch a preparation. South.

ANIMAL. n. ſ. [animal, Lat.]

1. A living creature corporeal, diſtinct, on the one ſide, from pure ſpirit, on the other, from mere matter.

Animals are ſuch beings, which, beſides the power of growing, and producing their like, as plants and vegetables have, are endowed alſo with ſenſation and ſpontaneous motion. Mr Ray gives two ſchemes of tables of them.

Animals are either
- Sanguineous, that is, ſuch as have blood, which breathe either by
  - Lungs, having either
    - Two ventricles in their heart, and thoſe either
      - Viviparous,
        - Aquatick, as the whale kind,
        - Terreſtrial, as quadrupeds,
      - Oviparous, as birds.
    - But one ventricle in the heart, as frogs, tortoiſes, and ſerpents.
  - Gills, as all ſanguineous fiſhes, except the whale kind.
- Exſanguineous, or without blood, which may be divided into
  - Greater, and thoſe either,
    - Naked,
      - Terreſtrial, as naked ſnails
      - Aquatick, as the polypus, cuttle-fiſh, &c.
    - Covered with a tegument, either
      - Cruſtaceous, [illegible]
      - Teſtaceous, either
        - Univalve, as limpets;
        - Bivalve, as oyſters, muſcles, cockles,
        - Turbinate, as periwinkles, ſnails, &c.
  - Leſſer, as inſects of all ſorts.

Viviparous hairy animals, or quadrupeds, are either
- Hoofed, which are either
  - Whole-footed or hoofed, as the horſe and aſs,
  - Cloven-footed, having the hoof divided
    - Two principal parts, called biſulca, either
      - Such as chew not the cud, as ſwine,
      - Ruminant, or ſuch as chew the cud, divided into
        - Such as have perpetual and hollow horns.
          - Beef-kind,
          - Sheep-kind,
          - Goat kind
        - Such as have ſolid, branched and deciduous horns, as the [illegible]
    - Four parts, or quadrifuca, as the rhinoceros and hippopo- [illegible]
- Clawed or digitate, having the foot divided into
  - Two parts or toes, having two nails, as the camel kind,
  - Many toes or claws, either
    - Unarmed, as the elephant;
    - Divided, which have either
      - Broad nails, and an human ſhape, as apes,
      - Narrower, and more pointed nails,
- Noxious, in reſpect of their teeth, are diſtinguiſhed into ſuch as have
  - Nails, long teeth, or tuſks, as the
    - The greater, which have
      - A ſhorter ſnout and rounder head, as the cat-kind,
      - A longer ſnout and head, as the dog-kind.
    - The leſſer, the vermin or weazel kind
  - Only two coarſe and remarkable fore-teeth, all which are phytivorous, and are called the hare kind. Ray.

Vegetables are proper enough to repair animals, as being near of the ſame ſpecifick gravity with the animal juices, and as conſiſting of the ſame parts with animal ſubſtances, ſpirit, water, ſalt, oil, earth, all which are contained in the ſap they derive from the earth. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Some of the animated ſubſtances have various organical or inſtrumental parts, fitted for a variety of motions from place to place, and a ſpring of life within themſelves, as beaſts, birds, fiſhes, and inſects, theſe are called animals. Other animated ſubſtances are called vegetables, which have within themſelves the principles of another ſort of life and growth, and of various productions of leaves and fruit, ſuch as we ſee in plants, herbs, and trees. Watts's Logick.

2. By way of contempt, we ſay of a ſtupid man, that he is a ſtupid animal.

ANIMAL. adj. [animalis, Lat.]

1. That which belongs or relates to animals.

There are other things in the world of ſpirits, wherein our ideas are very dark and confuſed; ſuch as their union with animal nature, the way of their acting on material beings, and their converſe with each other. Watts's Logick.

2. Animal functions, or ſuch diſtinguiſhed from natural and vital, are the lower powers of the mind, as, the will, memory, and imagination.

3. Animal life is oppoſed, on one ſide, to intellectual, and, on the other, to vegetable.

4. Animal is uſed in oppoſition to ſpiritual or rational, as, the animal nature.

ANIMALCULE. n. ſ. [animalculum, Lat.] A ſmall animal, particularly thoſe which are in their firſt and ſmalleſt ſtate.

We are to know, that they all come of the ſeed of animalcules of their own kind, that were before [illegible] there.

ANIMA'LITY. n. ſ. [from anima.] The ſtate of [illegible]

The word animal there only ſignifies human animality. In the minor propoſition, the word animal, for the ſame reaſon, ſignifies the animality of a gooſe: thereby it becomes an ambiguous term, and unfit to build the concluſion upon. Watts.

To ANIMATE. v. a. [anima, Lat.]

1. To quicken, to make alive, to give life to; as, the ſoul animates the body; man muſt have been animated by a higher power.

2. To give powers to, to beſtow the powers or effect of any thing.

But none, ah! none can animate the lyre,
And the mute ſtrings with vocal ſouls inſpire,
Whether the learn'd Minerva be her theme,
Or chaſte Diana bathing in the ſtream,
None can record their heav'nly praiſe ſo well,
As Heaven, in whoſe eyes ten thouſand Cupids dwell. Dryd.

3. To encourage, to incite.

The more to animate the people, he ſtood on high, from whence he might be beſt heard, and cried unto them with a loud voice. Knolles's Hiſtory of the Turks.

ANIMATED. adj. [from To animate.] Alive, poſſeſſing animal life.

All bodies have ſpirits and pneumatical parts within them; but the main differences between animate and inanimate, are two: the firſt is, that the ſpirits of things animate are all contained within themſelves, and are branched in veins and ſecret canals, as blood is; and, in living creatures, the ſpirits have not only branches, but certain cells or ſeats, where the principal ſpirits do reſide, and whereunto the reſt do reſort: but the ſpirits in things inanimate are ſhut in, and cut off by the tangible parts, and are not pervious one to another, as air is in ſnow. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N 601.

Nobler birth
Of creatures animate with gradual life,
Of growth, ſenſe, reaſon, all ſummed up in man. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. ix. l. 113.

There are ſeveral topicks there uſed againſt the atheiſm and idolatry of the heathens, ſuch as the viſible marks of divine wiſdom and goodneſs in the works of the creation, the vaſt diviſion of ſouls with matter, and the admirable ſtructure of animate bodies, and the like. Bentley's Sermons.

ANIMATED. participial adj. [from animate.] Lively, vigorous.

Warms the fires with animated ſound,
Pours balm into the bleeding lover's wounds. Pope.

ANIMATENESS. n. ſ. [from animate.] The ſtate of being animated. Dict.

ANIMATION. n. ſ. [from anima[illegible]

1. The act of animating or enlivening.

Plants or vegetables are the principal part of the blessed Jesus's work. They are the first producta, which is the word of animation. Bacon's Natural History, cent. v

2. The state of being endowed.

ANIMATIVE. adj. [from animate.] That which has the power of giving life, or animating.

ANIMATOR. n. f. [from animate.] That which gives life; that which implants a principle of life.

Those bodies being of a congenerous nature, do readily receive the impressions of their inditor, and, if not fettered by their gravity, conform themselves to situations, wherein they best unite to their animator. Brown's Vul. Err. b. ii. c. 2.

ANIMOSE. adj. [animosus, Lat.] Full of spirit; hot; vehement. Dict.

ANIMOSENESS. n. f. [from animose.] Spirit, heat; vehemence of temper. Dict.

ANIMOSITY. n. f. [animositas, Lat.] Vehemence of hatred; passionate malignity. It implies rather the disposition to break out into outrages, than the outrage itself.

They were sure to bring passion, animosity, and malice enough of their own, what evidence soever they had from others. Clarendon, b. viii.

If there is not some method found out for allaying these heats and animosities among the fair sex, one does not know to what outrages they may proceed. Addison's Freeholder, N° 23.

No religious sect ever carried their aversions for each other to greater heights than our state parties have done; who, the more to inflame their passions, have mixed religious and civil animosities together, borrowing one of their appellations from the church. Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of England man.

ANISE. n. f. [anisum, Lat.] A species of apium or parsley, with large sweet scented seeds. This plant is not worth propagating in England for use, because the seeds can be had much better and cheaper from Italy. Miller.

The seed of this plant has a sweetish taste, intermixed with something pungent and bitter, is reputed an aromatick, and prescribed not barely as a carminative against wind, but also as a pectoral, stomachick, and digestive. Chambers.

Ye pay the tithe of mint, and anise, and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone. Matt. xxv. 25.

ANKER n. f. [anker, Dut.] A liquid measure chiefly used at Amsterdam. It is the fourth part of the awm, and contains two stekans: each stekan consists of sixteen mengles, the mengle being equal to two of our wine quarts. Chambers.

ANKLE. n. f. [ancleop, Sax. enkel, Dutch.] The joint which joins the foot to the leg.

One of his ankles was much swelled and ulcerated on the inside, in several places. Wiseman.

My simple system shall suppose,
That Alma enters at the toes,
That then she mounts by just degrees
Up to the ankles, legs and knees. Prior.

ANKLE-BONE. n. f. [from ankle and bone.] The bone of the ankle.

The shin-bone, from the knee to the instep, is made by shadowing one half of the leg with a single shadow, the ankle-bone will shew itself by a shadow given underneath, as the knee. Peacham on Drawing.

ANNALIST. n. f. [from annals.] A writer of annals.

I wonder my author should be offended, especially [illegible] own annalist has given the same title to that of Syracuse. Atterb.

ANNALS. n. f. without singular number [annales, Lat.] Histories digested in the exact order of time; narratives in which every event is recorded under its proper year.

Could you with patience hear, or I relate,
O nymph! the tedious annals of our fate!
Through such a train of woes if I should run,
The day would sooner than the tale be done! Dryd. Virg.

We are assured, by many glorious examples in the annals of our religion, that every one, in the like circumstances of distress, will not act and argue thus; but thus will every one be tempted to act. Rogers's Sermons.

ANNATS. n. f. without singular. [annatæ, Lat.]

1. First fruits; because the rate of first fruits paid of spiritual livings, is after one year's profit. Cowell.

2. Masses said in the Romish church for the space of a year, or for any other time, either for the soul of a person deceased, or for the benefit of a person living. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To ANNEAL. v. a. [ælan, to heat, Saxon.]

1. To heat glass, that the colours laid on it may pierce through.

But when thou coast anneal in glass thy story,
——— then the light and glory
More rev'rend grows, and more doth win,
Which else shews wat'rish, bleak, and thin. Herbert.

When you purpose to anneal, take a plate of iron made fit for the oven, or, for want thereof, take a blue stone, which being made fit for the aforesaid oven, lay it upon the cross bars of iron. Peacham on Drawing.

Which her own inward symmetry reveal'd,
And like a picture shone, in glass anneal'd. Dryden's Fables.

2. To heat glass after it is blown, that it may not break.

3. To heat any thing in such a manner as to give it the true temper.

To ANNEX. v. a. [annecto, annexum, Lat. annexer, Fr.]

1. To unite to at the end; as, he annexed a codicil to his will.

2. To unite; as, a smaller thing to a greater; as, he annexed a province to his kingdom.

3. To unite a posteriori, annexion always presupposing something: thus we may say, punishment is annexed to guilt, but not guilt to punishment.

Concerning fate or destiny, of which the opinions of those learned men, that have written thereof, may be safely received, had they not thereunto annexed and fastened an inevitable necessity, and made it more general and universally powerful than it is. Raleigh's History of the World.

Nations will decline so low
From virtue, which is reason, that no wrong,
But justice, and some fatal curse annex'd,
Deprives them of their outward liberty. Milton's Par. Lost.

I mean not the authority, which is annexed to your office, I speak of that only which is inborn and inherent to your person. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

He cannot but love virtue wherever it is, and annex happiness always to the exercise of it. Atterbury's Sermons.

The temporal reward is annexed to the bare performance of the action, but the eternal to the obedience. Rogers's Sermons.

ANNEX. n. f. [from To annex.] The thing annexed; addition. Blount.

Failing in his first attempt to be but like the highest in heaven, he hath obtained of men to be the same on earth, and hath accordingly assumed the annexes of divinity. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 10.

ANNEXATION. n. f. [from annex.]

1. Conjunction; addition.

If we can return to that charity and peaceable mindedness, which Christ so vehemently recommends to us, we have his own promise, that the whole body will be full of light. Matt. [illegible] that all other christian virtues will, by way of concomitance or annexation, attend them. Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. Union; coalition; conjunction.

How these annexations of benefices first came into the church, whether by the prince's authority, or the pope's licence, is a very great dispute. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

ANNEXION n. f. [from annex.] The act of annexing; addition.

It is necessary to engage the fears of men, by the annexion of such penalties as will overbalance temporal pleasure. Rogers.

ANNEXMENT. n. f. [from annex.]

1. The act of annexing.

2. The thing annexed.

When it falls,
Each small annexment, petty consequence,
Attends the boist'rous ruin. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

ANNIHILABLE. adj. [from annihilate.] That which may be reduced to nothing, that which may be put out of existence.

To ANNIHILATE. v. a. [ad and nihilum, Lat.]

1. To reduce to nothing; to put out of existence.

It [illegible] impossible for any body to be utterly annihilated; but that as it was the work of the omnipotency of God, to make somewhat of nothing; so it requireth the like omnipotency to turn somewhat into nothing. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 100.

That [illegible]ht'st me, by making me
Love her, who doth neglect both me and thee,
T' invent and practise this one way, t' annihilate all three. Donne.

He [illegible]ured of God's mercy; he, by a deconcilation of all hope, [illegible]ilated his mercy. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 2.

Whose friendship can stand against assaults, strong enough to annihilate the friendship of puny minds; such an one has reached true constancy. South.

Some imagined, water sufficient to a deluge was created, and, when the business was done, disbanded, and annihilated. Woodward's Natural History.

2. To destroy, so as to make the thing otherwise than it was.

The flood hath altered, deformed, or rather annihilated, this place, so as no man can find any mark or memory thereof. Raleigh's History of the World.

3. To annul; to destroy the agency of any thing.

There is no reason, that any one commonwealth should annihilate that whereupon the whole world has agreed. Hooker.

ANNIHILATION. n. f. [from annihilate.] The act of reducing to nothing. The state of being reduced to nothing.

God hath his influence into the very essence of things, without which their utter annihilation could not choose but follow. Hooker, b. v. § 56.

That knowledge, which as spirits we obtain,
Is to be valu'd in the midst of pain:
Annihilation were to lose heav'n more
We are not quite exil'd, where thought can soar. Dryden.

ANNIVERSARY. n. f. [anniversarius, Lat.]

1. A day celebrated as it returns in the course of the year.

For encouragement to follow the example of martyrs, the primitive primitive chriſtians met at the places of their martyrdom, to praiſe God for them, and to obſerve the anniverſary of their ſufferings. Stillingfleet's Defence of Diſc. on Romiſh Idolatry.

2. The act of celebration, or performance, in honour of the anniverſary day

Donne had never ſeen Mrs. Drury, whom he has made immortal in his admirable anniverſaries. Dryden.

3. Anniverſary is an office in the Romiſh church, celebrated not only once a year, but which ought to be ſaid daily through the year, for the ſoul of the deceaſed. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ANNIVE'RSARY. adj. [anniverſarius, Lat.] Returning with the revolution of the year; annual; yearly.

The heaven whirled about with admirable celerity, moſt conſtantly finiſhing its anniverſary viciſſitudes. Ray.

They deny giving any worſhip to a creature, as inconſiſtent with chriſtianity, but confeſs the honour and eſteem for the martyrs, which they expreſſed by keeping their anniverſary days, and recommending their example. Stillingfl. Defence.

ANNO DOMINI. [Lat.] In the year of our Lord; as, anno domini, or A. D. 1751; that is, in the ſeventeen hundred and fifty firſt year from the birth of our Saviour

ANNOIA'NCE. n. ſ. [from annoy, but not now in uſe.]

It hath a double ſignification, being as well for any hurt done either to a publick place, as highway, bridge, or common river, or to a private, by laying any thing that may breed infection, by encroaching, or ſuch like means, as alſo, for the writ that is brought upon this tranſgreſſion. See NUISANCE, the word now uſed. Blount.

ANNOLIS. n. ſ. An American animal, like a lizard.

ANNOTA'TION. n. ſ. [annotatio, Lat.] Explications or remarks written upon books, notes.

It might appear very improper to publiſh annotations, without the text itſelf whereunto they relate Boyle.

ANNOTA'TOR. n. ſ. [Lat.] A writer of notes, or annotations; a ſcholaſt; a commentator

I have not that reſpect for the annotators, which they generally meet with in the world. Felton on the Claſſicks

To ANNO'UNCE v. a. [annoncer, Fr. annuncio, Lat.]

1. To publiſh; to proclaim.

Of the Meſſiah I have heard foretold
By all the prophets; of thy birth at length
Announc'd by Gabriel with the firſt I knew. Paradiſe Reg.

2. To pronounce; to declare by a judicial ſentence.

Thoſe, mighty Jove, mean time, thy glorious care,
Who model nations, publiſh laws, announce
Or life or death Pope.

To ANNOY v. a. [nuyer, Fr.] To incommode; to vex, to teaze; to moleſt

Woe to poor man; each outward thing annoys him;
He heaps in inward grief, that moſt deſtroys him. Sidney.
Her joyous preſence and ſweet company,
In full content he there did long enjoy;
Ne wicked envy, nor vile jealouſy,
His dear delights were able to annoy Fairy Queen, b. i.
As one who long in populous city pent,
Where houſes thick, and ſewers, annoy the air,
Forth iſſuing on a ſummer's morn to breathe
Among the pleaſant villages, and farms
Adjoin'd, from each thing met conceives delight.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ix. l. 445

Inſects ſeldom uſe their offenſive weapons, unleſs provoked let them but alone, and annoy them not. Ray on the Creation.

ANNOY. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Injury; moleſtation; trouble.

Sleep, Richmond, ſleep in peace, and wake in joy;
Good angels guard thee from the boar's annoy. Shakeſp. R. III.
All pain and joy is in their working
The things we fear bring leſs annoy
Than fear, and hope brings greater joy;
But in themſelves they cannot ſtay. Donne.
What then remains, but, after paſt annoy,
To take the good viciſſitude of joy Dryden's Fables.

ANNO'YANCE. n. ſ. [from annoy.]

1. That which annoys, that which hurts.

A gnat, a duſt, a gnat, a wand'ring hair,
Any annoyance in that precious ſenſe Shakeſp. King John.
Crows, ravens, rooks, and magpies, are great annoyances to corn. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. The ſtate of being annoyed, or act of annoying.

The ſpit venom of their poiſoned hearts breaketh out to the annoyance of others. Hooker, b. v. §

The greateſt annoyance and diſturbance of mankind, has been from one of thoſe two things, force or fraud. South.

For the further annoyance and terrour of any beſieged place, they would throw into it dead bodies. Hakewill's Math. Mag

ANNO'YER. n. ſ. [from To annoy.] The perſon that annoys.

ANNUAL. adj. [annuel, Fr. from annus, Lat.]

1. That which comes yearly

Annual for me, the grape, the roſe, renew,
The juice nectareous, and the balmy dew. Pope's Eſſ on M

2. That which is reckoned by the year

The king's majeſty
Does purpoſe honour to you, to which

A thouſand pounds a year, annual ſupport,
Out of his grace he adds. Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

3. That which laſts only a year.

The dying in the winter of the roots of plants that are annual, ſeemeth to be cauſed by the over-expence of the ſap, which being prevented, they will ſuperannuate, if they ſtand warm. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 448.

Every tree may, in ſome ſenſe, be ſaid to be an annual plant, both leaf, flower, and fruit, proceeding from the coat that was ſuperinduced over the wood the laſt year Ray on the Creation.

ANNUALLY. adv. [from annual.] Yearly; every year.

By two drachms, they thought it ſufficient to ſignify a heart; becauſe the heart at one year weigheth two drachms, that is, a quarter of an ounce; and unto fifty years annually encreaſeth the weight of one drachm. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 30.

The whole ſtrength of a nation is the utmoſt that a prince can raiſe annually from his ſubjects. Swift.

ANNUITANT. n. ſ. [from annuity.] He that poſſeſſes or receives an annuity.

ANNUITY. n. ſ. [annuité, Fr.]

1. A yearly rent to be paid for term of life or years. The differences between a rent and an annuity are, that every rent is going out of land, but an annuity charges only the granter, or his heirs, that have aſſets by deſcent. The ſecond difference is, that, for the recovery of an annuity, no action lies, but only the writ of annuity againſt the granter, his heirs, or ſucceſſors; but of a rent, the ſame actions lie as do of land. The third difference is, that an annuity is never taken for aſſets, becauſe it is no freehold in law; nor ſhall be put in execution upon a ſtatute merchant, ſtatute ſtaple, or elegit, as a rent may Cowel.

2. A yearly allowance.

He was generaly known to be the ſon of one earl, and brother to another, who ſupplied his expence, beyond what his annuity from his father would bear. Clarendon.

To ANNU'L. v. a. [from nullus.]

1. To make void, to nullify; to abrogate; to aboliſh.

That which gives force to the law, is the authority that enacts it; and whoever deſtroys this authority, does, in effect, annul the law Rogers's Sermons

2. To reduce to nothing; to obliterate.

Light the pure work of God to me is extinct,
And all her various objects of delight
Annull'd, which might in part my grief have eas'd.
Milton's Sampſon Agoniſtes, l. 72.

A'NNULAR adj. [from annulus, Lat.] In the form of a ring.

That they might not, in bending the arm or leg, riſe up, he has tied them to the bones by annular ligaments. Cheyne.

A'NNULARY. adj. [from annulus, Lat.] In the form of rings.

A feast is made for laughter, and wine maketh merry: but money answereth all things. Eccl.

8. To satisfy any claim or petition.

Revenge the jeering and disdain'd contempt
Of this proud king, who studies day and night
To answer all the debt he owes unto you,
Even with the bloody payments of your deaths. Sh. Hen. IV.

Men no sooner find their appetites unanswered, than they complain the times are injurious. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

9. To act reciprocally upon.

Say, do'st thou yet the Roman harp command?
Do the strings answer to thy noble hand? Dryden's Persius.

10. To stand as opposite or correlative to something else.

There can but two things create love, perfection and usefulness; to which answer, on our part, 1 Admiration, and, 2 Desire, and both these are centered in love. Taylor.

11. To bear proportion to.

He desired, that proper officers might search me; for probably I might carry several weapons, which must needs be dangerous things, if they answered the bulk of so prodigious a person.

12. To perform what is endeavoured or intended by the agent.

Our part is, to choose out the most deserving objects, and the most likely to answer the ends of our charity, and when that is done, all is done that lies in our power: the rest must be left to providence. Atterbury's Sermons.

13. To comply with.

He dies that touches of this fruit,
Till and my affairs are answered. Shakesp. As you like it.

14. To succeed, to produce the wished event.

Jason followed her counsel, whereto, when the event had answered, he again demanded the fleece. Raleigh's Hist. of the W.

We see likewise, that much wat

this is a principal cauſe, why, in operations upon bodies for their verſion or alteration, the trial in great quantities doth not anſwer the trial in ſmall; and ſo deceiveth many.
Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 92.

15 To appear to any call, or authoritative ſummons; in which ſenſe, though figuratively, the following paſſage may be, perhaps, taken.

Thou wert better in thy grave, than to anſwer, with thy uncovered body, this extremity of the ſkies. Shakeſp. K. Lear.

16. To be over-againſt any thing.

Fire anſwers fire, and, by their paly beams,
Each battle ſees the other's umber'd face. Shakeſp. Henry V.

A'NSWER. n. ſ. [from To anſwer]

1. That which is ſaid, whether in ſpeech or writing, in return to a queſtion, or poſition.

It was a right anſwer of the phyſician to his patient, that had ſore eyes: If you have more pleaſure in wine than in your ſight, wine is good. Locke.

How can we think of appearing at that tribunal, without being able to give a ready anſwer to the queſtions which he ſhall then put to us, about the poor and the afflicted, the hungry and the naked, the ſick and impriſoned? Atterbury's Sermons.

2. In law, a confutation of a charge exhibited againſt a perſon.

A perſonal anſwer ought to have three qualities; it ought to be pertinent to the matter in hand, it ought to be abſolute and unconditional; it ought to be clear and certain. Ayliffe's Par.

A'NSWER-JOBBER. n. ſ. [from anſwer and jobber] He that makes a trade of writing anſwers.

Their force to wine through ages should impart,
This dissipation, this profuse expence,
Nor shrinks their size, nor wastes their stores immense.
Blackmore on the Creation.

ANTIMONY. n. f. [The stibium of the ancients, by the Greeks called στίμμι. The reason of its modern denomination is referred to Basil Valentine, a German monk; who, as the tradition relates, having thrown some of it to the hogs, observed, that, after it had purged them heartily, they immediately fattened, and therefore, he imagined, his fellow monks would be the better for a like dose. The experiment, however, succeeded so ill, that they all died of it; and the medicine was thenceforward called antimoine, anti-monk.]

Antimony is a mineral substance, or a metallic nature, having all the seeming characters of a real metal, except malleability, and may be called a semimetal, being a fusible grebe of some undetermined metal, combined with a sulphurous and stony substance. Mines of all metals afford it; but chiefly thoſe of ſilver and lead; that in gold mines is reckoned beſt It has alſo its own mines in Hungary, Germany, and France. It is found in clods or ſtones of ſeveral ſizes, bearing a near reſemblance to black lead, only being lighter and harder Its texture is full of little ſhining veins or threads, like needles; brittle as glaſs. Sometimes veins of a red or golden colour are intermixed, which is called male antimony, that without them being denominated female antimony. It fuſes in the fire, though with ſome difficulty; and diſſolves more eaſily in water. When dug out of the earth, it is put into large crucibles, fuſed by a violent fire, and then poured into cones, which make the crude antimony of the ſhops. Of theſe cones the top is the pureſt part, and the baſe the fouleſt. It deſtroys and diſſipates all metals fuſed with it, except gold; and is therefore uſeful in refining. It is a common ingredient in ſpeculums, or burning concaves; ſerving to give them a finer poliſh. It makes a part in bell metal; and renders the ſound more clear. It is mingled with tin, to make it more hard, white, and ſound; and with lead, in the caſting of printers letters, to render them more ſmooth and firm It is a general help in the melting of metals, and eſpecially in caſting of cannon balls. In pharmacy it is uſed under various forms, and with various intentions, chiefly as an emetick. It had no place in medicine before the fourteenth century; and was generally neglected, till Paracelſus brought it into eſteem, in the beginning of the ſixteenth century, but much miſchief was done by it, till the proper methods of preparing it were, after a long courſe of experiments, diſcovered Chambers.

Those

[Lat. from ἀντὶ and οἰκέω, to inhabit.] In geography, thoſe inhabitants of the earth, who live under the ſame meridian, and at the ſame diſtance from the equator, the one toward the north, and the other to the ſouth. Hence they have the ſame longitude, and their latitude is alſo the ſame, but of a different denomination. They are in the ſame ſemi-circle of the meridian, but oppoſite parallels. They have preciſely the ſame hours of the day and night, but oppoſite ſeaſons, and the night of the one is always equal to the day of the other. Chambers.

ANTONOMASIA. n. ſ. [from ἀντὶ and ὄνομα, a name.] A form of ſpeech, in which, for a proper name, is put the name of ſome dignity, office, profeſſion, ſcience, or trade, or when a proper name is put in the room of an appellative. Thus a king is called his majeſty; a nobleman, his lordſhip. We ſay the philoſopher inſtead of Ariſtotle, and the orator for Cicero: thus a man is called by the name of his country, a German, an Italian, and a grave man is called a Cato, and a wiſe man a Solomon. Smith's Rhetorick.

ANTRE. [antre, Fr. antrum, Lat.] A cavern; a cave; a den.

With all my travels hiſtory:
Wherein of antres vaſt, and deſarts idle,
It was my hent to ſpeak. Shakeſp. Othello.

ANVIL. n. ſ. [ænpille, Sax.]

1. The iron block on which the ſmith lays his metal to be forged.

I ſaw a ſmith ſtand with his hammer, thus,
The whilſt his iron did on the anvil cool. Shak. King John.
On the eternal anvils here he found
The brethren bearing, and the blows go round. Dryden.

2. Any thing on which blows are laid.

Here I clip
The anvil of my ſword, and do conteſt
Hotly and nobly. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

3. Figuratively, to be upon the anvil, is to be in a ſtate of formation or preparation.

Several members of our houſe knowing, ſome time ago, what was upon the anvil, went to the clergy, and aſked their judgment. Swift.

ANXIETY. n. ſ. [anxietas, Lat.]

1. Trouble of mind about ſome future event; ſuſpenſe with uneaſineſs; perplexity; ſolicitude.

To be happy, is not only to be freed from the pains and diſeaſes of the body, but from anxiety and vexation of ſpirit, not only to enjoy the pleaſures of ſenſe, but peace of conſcience, and tranquillity of mind. Tillotſon.

2. In the medical language, depreſſion; lowneſs of ſpirits.

In anxieties which attend fevers, when the cauſe is over, a warmer regimen may be allowed, and becauſe anxieties often happen by ſpaſms from wind, ſpices are uſeful. Arbuthnot.

ANXIOUS. adj. [anxius, Lat.]

But all the mighty bleſs is fugitive;
Diſcolour'd ſickneſs, anxious labour come,
And age, and death's inexorable doom. Dryden's Virgil.

3. Careful, as of a thing of great importance.

There being no writings we need to be ſo ſcrupulous about the meaning of, but thoſe that contain truths we are to believe, or laws we are to obey, we may be leſs anxious about the ſenſe of other authours. Locke.

4. It has generally for or about before the object, but ſometimes of.

Who anxious of neglect, ſuſpecting charge,
Conſults her pride, and meditates revenge. Granville.

ANXIOUSLY. adv. [from anxious.] In an anxious manner, ſolicitouſly, anxiouſly; carefully.

But where the loſs is temporal, every probability of it needs not put us ſo anxiouſly to prevent it, ſince it might be repaired again. South.

Thou what befits the new lord mayor,
And what the Gallick arms will do,
Art anxiouſly inquiſitive to know. Id.

ANXIOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from anxious.] The quality of being anxious; ſuſceptibility of anxiety.

APOLOGUE. n. f. [ἀπόλογος.] Fable, ſtory contrived to teach ſome moral truth

An apologue of Æſop is beyond a ſyllogiſm, and proverbs more powerful than demonſtration. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Some men are remarked for pleaſantneſs in raillery; others for apologues and appoſite diverting ſtories. Locke.

APOLOGY. n. f. [apologia, Lat. ἀπολογία.]

1. Defence, excuſe. Apology generally ſignifies rather excuſe than vindication, and tends rather to extenuate the fault, than prove innocence. This is, however, ſometimes unregarded by writers.

In her face excuſe
Came prologue, and apology too prompt,
Which with bland words at will ſhe thus addreſs'd
Milton's Parad. Loſt, b. ix. l. 854.

2. It has for before the object of excuſe.

It is not my intention to make an apology for my poem. ſome will think it needs no excuſe, and others will receive none.
Dryden's Pref. to Ilyſ. and Acast.

I ſhall neither trouble the reader, nor myſelf, with any apology for publiſhing of theſe ſermons, for if they be, in any meaſure, truly ſerviceable to the end for which they are deſigned, I do not ſee what apology is neceſſary, and if they be not ſo, I am ſure none can be ſufficient. Tillotſon.

A fever may take away my reaſon, or memory, and an apo-

APORIA. n. ſ. [ἀπορία] Is a figure in rhetorick, by which the ſpeaker ſhews, that he doubts where to begin for the multitude of matter, or what to ſay in ſome ſtrange and ambiguous thing, and doth, as it were, argue the caſe with himſelf. Thus Cicero ſays, Whether he took them from his fellow more impudently, gave them to a whore more ſalaciouſly, removed them from the Roman people more wickedly, or altered them more preſumptuouſly, I cannot well declare. Smith's Rhetorick.

APORRHOEA. n. ſ. [ἀπορροὴ, &c.] Effluvium, emanation; ſomething emitted by another

The reaſon of this he endeavours to make out by atomical aporrhoeas, which paſſing from the educated weapon to the wound, and being incorporated with the particles of the ſalve, carry them to the affected part. Glanville's Sceptis, c. 24.

APOSIOPE'SIS n. ſ. [ἀποσιώπησις, from ἀπὸ, after, and σιωπάω, to be ſilent.] A form of ſpeech, by which the ſpeaker, through ſome affection, as ſorrow, bathfulneſs, fear, anger, or vehemency, breaks off his ſpeech before it be all ended. A figure, when, ſpeaking of a thing, we yet ſeem to conceal it, though indeed we aggravate it; or when the courſe of the ſentence begun is ſo ſtayed, as thereby ſome part of the ſentence not being uttered, may be underſtood, as, I might ſay much more, but modeſty commands ſilence. Smith's Rhetorick

APO'STASY. n. ſ. [ἀποστασία] Departure from what a man has profeſſed it is generally applied to religion; ſometimes with the particle from.

The canon law defines apoſtaſy to be a wilful departure from that ſtate of faith, which any perſon has profeſſed himſelf to hold in the chriſtian church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

The affable archangel had forewarn'd
Adam, by due example, to beware
Apoſtaſy, by what befel in heav'n
To thoſe apoſtates. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. vi. l. 43.

Vice in us were not only wickedneſs, but apoſtaſy, degenerate wickedneſs. Sprat

Whoever do give different worſhips, muſt bring in more gods; which is an apoſtaſy from one God. Stillingfleet.

A [illegible] O

The angels, for diſobedience, thou haſt reſerved to a miſerable immortality, but unto man, equally rebellious, equally apoſtate from thee and goodneſs, thou haſt given a Sav[illegible]
Rogers's Sermons

Apoſtates in point of faith, are, according to the civil law, ſubject unto all puniſhments ordained againſt hereticks
Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici

[illegible] apoſtate.

To APO'STATIZE. v. n. [from apoſtate] To forſake one's profeſſion, it is commonly uſed of one who departs from his religion.

None revolt from the faith; not becauſe they muſt not look upon a woman to luſt after her, but becauſe they are reſtrained from the perpetration of their luſts. If wanton glances, and libidinous thoughts, had been permitted by the goſpel, they would have apoſtatized nevertheleſs. Bentley's Sermons.

To APO'STEMATE. v. n. [from apoſteme.] To become an apoſteme; to ſwell and corrupt into matter.

There is care to be taken in abſceſſes of the breaſt and belly, in danger of breaking inwards, yet, by opening theſe too ſoon, they ſome times apoſtemate again, and become crude. Wiſeman.

APOSTE'MATION n. ſ. [from apoſtemate] The formation of an apoſteme, the gathering of a hollow purulent tumour.

Nothing can be more admirable than the many ways nature hath provided for preventing, or curing of fevers; as, vomitings, apoſtemations, ſalivations, &c. Grew's Coſmologia Sacra.

APOSTEME. } n. ſ. [ἀπόστημα.] A hollow ſwelling, filled with APOSTUME. } purulent matter; an abſceſs.

With equal propriety we may affirm, that ulcers of the lungs, or apoſtemes of the brain, do happen only in the left ſide.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 3

The opening of apoſtemes, before the ſuppuration be perfected, weakeneth the heat, and renders them crude. Wiſeman.

APO'STLE. n. ſ. [apoſtolus, Lat. ἀπόστολος.] A perſon ſent with mandates by another It is particularly applied to them whom our Saviour deputed to preach the goſpel.

But all his mind is bent to holineſs,
His champions are the prophets and apoſtles. Shak. Hen. IV.

I am far from pretending infallibility, that would be to erect myſelf into an apoſtle a preſumption in any one that cannot confirm what he ſays by miracles. Locke.

We know but a ſmall part of the notion of an apoſtle, by knowing barely that he is ſent forth. Watts's Logick.

APO'STLESHIP n. ſ. [from apoſtle.] The office or [illegible] of an apoſtle.

Where, becauſe faith is in too low degree,
I thought it ſome apoſtleſhip in me
To ſpeak things, which by faith alone I ſee. Donne.

God hath ordered it, that St. Paul hath writ epiſtles; which are all confined within the buſineſs of his apoſtleſhip, and ſo contain nothing but points of chriſtian inſtruction.
Locke's Eſſay on St. Paul's Epiſtles.

APOSTO'LICAL. adj. [from apoſtolick.] Delivered or taught by the apoſtles, belonging to the apoſtles.

They acknowledge not, that the church keeps any thing as apoſtolical, which is not found in the apoſtles writings, in what other records ſoever it be found. Hooker, b. v. §

Declare yourſelf for that church, which is founded upon ſcripture, reaſon, apoſtolical practice and antiquity. Hooker.

APOSTO'LICALLY. adv. [from apoſtolical.] In the manner of the apoſtles.

Namely, t' appeal each other of high treason. Shak. Rich II.

Appe'al. n. s. [from the verb To appeal.]

1. An appeal is a provocation from an inferior to a superior judge, whereby the jurisdiction of the inferior judge is for a while suspended, in respect of the cause, the cognizance being devolved to the superior judge. Ayliffe's Parergon.

This ring
Deliver them, and your appeal to us
There make before them. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Our reason prompts us to a future state,
The last appeal from fortune and from fate,
Where God's all righteous ways will be declar'd. Dryden

There are distributers of justice, from whom there lies an appeal to the prince. Addison on Italy.

2. In the common law.

An accusation; which is a lawful declaration of another man's crime before a competent judge, by one that sets his name to the declaration, and undertakes to prove it, upon the penalty that may ensue of the contrary; more commonly used for the private accusation of a murderer, by a party who had interest in the party murdered, and of any felon, by one of his accomplices in the fact. Cowell

The duke's unjust,
Thus to retort your manifest appeal,
And put your trial in the villain's mouth,
Which here you come to accuse. Shak. M. W. of Windsor.

Hast thou, according to thy oath and bond,
Brought hither Henry Hereford, thy bold son,
Here to make good the boist'rous late appeal
Against the duke of Norfolk? Shakespeare

3. A summons to answer a charge.

Nor shall the sacred character of king
Be urg'd to shield me from thy bold appeal,
If I have injur'd thee, that makes us equal. Dryd. Don Seb.

4. A call upon any as witness.

The casting up of the eyes, and lifting up of the hands, is a kind of appeal to the Deity, the author of wonders. Bacon.

APTOTE. n. ſ. [of α and πτῶσις.] A noun which is not declined with caſes.

AQUA. n. ſ. [Lat.] A word ſignifying water, very much uſed in chymical writings.

AQUA FORTIS. [Latin.] A corroſive liquor made by diſtilling purified nitre with calcined vitriol, or rectified oil of vitriol in a ſtrong heat, the liquor, which riſes in fumes red as blood, being collected, is the ſpirit of nitre or aqua fortis; which ſerves as a menſtruum for diſſolving of ſilver, and all other metals, except gold. But if ſea ſalt, or ſal ammoniack, be added to aqua fortis, it commences aqua regia, and will then diſſolve no metal but gold. Aqua fortis is commonly held to have been invented about the year 1300, though others will have it to have been known in the time of Moſes. It is ſerviceable to refiners, in ſeparating ſilver from gold and copper; to the workers in moſaick, for ſtaining and colouring their woods; to dyers, in their colours, particularly ſcarlet, and to other artiſts, for colouring bone and ivory. With aqua fortis bookbinders marble the covers of books, and diamond cutters ſeparate diamonds from metalline powders. It is alſo uſed in etching copper or braſs plates. Chambers.

The diſſolving of ſilver in aqua fortis, and gold in aqua regia, and not vice verſa, would not be difficult to know. Locke.

AQUA MARINA, of the Italian lapidaries, is of a ſea or bluiſh green. This ſtone ſeems to me to be the beryllus of Pliny. Woodward's Meth. of Foſſils.

AQUA MIRABILIS. [Latin.] The wonderful water, is prepared of cloves, galangals, cubebs, mace, cardomums, nutmegs, ginger, and ſpirit of wine, digeſted twenty four hours, then diſtilled. It is a good and agreeable cordial.

AQUA REGIA, or AQUA REGALIS. [Latin.] An acid corroſive ſpirit or water, ſo called becauſe it ſerves as a menſtruum to diſſolve gold, commonly eſteemed the king of metals. Its baſis, or eſſential ingredient, is common ſea ſalt, the only ſalt in nature which will operate on gold. It is commonly prepared by mixing common ſea ſalt, or ſal ammoniack, or the ſpirit of them, with ſpirit of nitre, or common aqua fortis. Chambers.

He adds to his complex idea of gold, that of fixedneſs or ſolubility in aqua regia. Locke.

AQUA VITÆ. [Latin.] It is commonly underſtood of what is otherwiſe called brandy, or ſpirit of wine, either ſimple or prepared with aromaticks. But ſome appropriate the term brandy to what is procured from wine, or the grape; aqua-vitæ, to that drawn after the ſame manner from malt. Chambers.

I will rather truſt a Fleming with my butter, parſon Hugh the Welchman with my cheeſe, an Iriſhman with my aqua vitæ bottle, or a thief to walk with my ambling gelding, than my wife with herſelf. Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Windſor.

AQUATICK. adj. [aquaticus, Lat. from aqua, water.]

And turn love's soldiers upon thee,
To exercise their archery. Crashaw's Steps to Temple.

A'RCHES-COURT. n. s. [from arches and court.] The chief and most ancient consistory that belongs to the archbishop of Canterbury, for the debating of spiritual causes, so called from Bow-church in London, where it is kept, whose top is raised of stone-pillars, built arch-wise. The judge of this court is termed the dean of the arches, or official of the arches-court: dean of the arches, because with this office is commonly joined a peculiar jurisdiction of thirteen parishes in London, termed a deanery, being exempted from the authority of the bishop of London, and belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury; of which the parish of Bow is one. Some others say, that he was first called dean of the arches, because the official to the archbishop, the dean of the arches, was his substitute in his court; and by that means the names became confounded. The jurisdiction of this judge is ordinary, and extends through the whole province of Canterbury: so that, upon any appeal, he forthwith, and without any further examination of the cause, sends out his citation to the party appealed, and his inhibition to the judge from whom the appeal is made. Cowell.

A'RCHETYPE n. s. [archetypum, Lat.] The original of which any resemblance is made.

Our souls, though they might have perceived images themselves by simple sense, yet it seems inconceivable, how they should apprehend their archetypes. Glanville's Scepsis Scientifica.

As a man, a tree, are the outward objects of our perception, and the outward archetypes or patterns of our ideas, so our sensations of hunger, cold, are also inward archetypes or patterns of our ideas. But the notions or pictures of these things, as they are in the mind, are the ideas. Watts's Logick.

ARCHE'TYPAL. adj. [archetypus, Lat.] Original; being a pattern from which copies are made.

Through contemplation's optick I have seen
Him who is fairer than the sons of men
The source of good, the light archetypal. Norris's Miscell.

A'RCHITECT. n. s. [architectus, Lat.]

1. A professor of the art of building.

The architect's glory consists in the designment and idea of the work; his ambition should be to make the form triumph over the matter. Wotton.

2. A contriver of a building, a builder.

The hasty multitude
Admiring enter'd, and the work some praise,
And some the architect: his hand was known
In heav'n, by many a tow'red structure high,
Where sceptr'd angels held their residence,
And sat as princes. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. 1.

3. The contriver or former of any compound body.

This inconvenience the divine architect of the body obviated. Ray on the Creation.

4. The contriver of any thing.

An irreligious Moor,
Chief architect and plotter of these woes. Shak. Tit. Andron.

ARCHITE'CTIVE. adj. [from architect.] That performs the work of architecture.

How could the bodies of many of them, particularly the last mentioned, be furnished with architective materials?

Archæologia by Tooke.

ARCHITECTO'NICK. adj. [from ἀρχὸς, chief, and τέκτων, an artificer.] That which has the power or skill of an architect; that which can build or form any thing.

To say that some more fine part of either, or all the hypostatical principle, is the architect of this elaborate structure, is to give occasion to demand, what proportion of the tria prima afforded this architectonick spirit, and what agent made so skilful and happy a mixture. Boyle's Scept. Chym.

ARCHITECTURE. n. s. [architectura, Lat.]

1. The art or science of building.

Architecture is divided into civil architecture, called by way of eminence architecture; military architecture, or fortification, and naval architecture, which, besides building of ships and vessels, includes also ports, moles, docks, &c. Some think the Tyrians were the first improvers of architecture; but others contend, that the rules of this art were delivered by God himself to Solomon, from whom the Tyrians had their instruct[illegible], which they afterwards communicated to the Egyptians; those to the Grecians, and these again to the Romans. Under Augustus, architecture arrived to its greatest glory; but it afterwards dwindled by degrees, and at last fell with the western empire, in the fifth century, when the Visigoths destroyed all the most beautiful monuments of antiquity, and a new manner of building took its rise, called the Gothick, coarse, artless, and massive. Of the same kind was the Arabesk, Moorish or Moorish architecture, brought from the South by the Moors and Saracens. The architects of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth centuries, who had some knowledge of sculpture, seemed to make perfection consist altogether in the delicacy and multitude of ornaments, which they frequently bestowed on their buildings without any conduct or taste. In the two last centuries, the architects of Italy and France were wholly bent upon retrieving the primitive simplicity and beauty of ancient architecture, in which they did not fail of success. This art is divided into five orders; the Tuscan, Dorick, Ionick, Corinthian, and Composite; which took their rise from the different proportions that the different kinds of buildings rendered necessary, according to the bulk, strength, delicacy, richness, or simplicity required. Chambers.

Our fathers next in architecture skill'd,
Cities for use, and forts for safety build
Then palaces and lofty domes arose,
These for devotion, and for pleasure those. Blackm. Creat.

2. The effect or performance of the science of building.

The formation of the first earth being a piece of divine architecture, ascribed to a particular providence. Burnet's Theory.

A'RCHITRAVE. n. s. [from ἀρχὸς, chief, and trabs, Lat. a beam; because it is supposed to represent the principal beam in timber buildings.] That part of a column, or order of a column, which lies immediately upon the capital, and is the lowest member of the entablature. This member is different in the different orders; and, in building architrave doors and windows, the workman frequently follows his own fancy. The architrave is sometimes called the reason piece, or master beam, in timber buildings, as porticos, cloisters, &c. In chimnies it is called the mantle piece; and over jambs of doors, and mantels of windows, hyperthyron. Builders Dict.

The materials laid over this pillar were of wood, through the lightness whereof the architrave could not suffer, nor the column itself, being so substantial. Wotton's Architecture.

Westward a pompous frontispiece appear'd,
On Dorick pillars of white marble rear'd,
Crown'd with an architrave of antique mold,
And sculpture rising on the roughen'd gold. Pope's T. of F.

A'RCHIVES. n. s. without a singular [archivum, Lat.] The places where records or ancient writings are kept. It is perhaps sometimes used for the writings themselves.

Though we think our words vanish with the breath that utters them, yet they become records in God's court, and are laid up in his archives, as witnesses either for or against us. Government of the Tongue, § 1.

I shall now only look a little into the Mosaick archives, to observe what they furnish us with upon this subject. Woodward.

A'RCHWISE. adv. [from arch and wise.] In the form of an arch.

The court of arches, so called ab arcuata ecclesia, or from Bow church in London, which is dedicated to the Virgin Mary, by reason of the steeple or clochier thereof, raised at the top with stone pillars in fashion of a bow bent archwise. Ayliffe's Par

ARGUME'NTAL. adj. [from argument.] Belonging to argument; reaſoning.

Afflicted ſenſe thou kindly doſt ſet free,
Oppreſs'd with argumental tyranny
And routed reaſon finds a ſafe retreat in thee. Pope.

ARGUMENTA'TION. n. ſ. [from argument.] Reaſoning, the act of reaſoning.

Argumentation is that operation of the mind, whereby we infer one propoſition from two or more propoſitions premiſed. Or it is the drawing a concluſion, which before was unknown, or doubtful, from ſome propoſitions more known and evident; ſo when we have judged that matter cannot think, and that the mind of man doth think, we conclude, that therefore the mind of man is not matter. Watts's Logick.

I ſuppoſe it is no ill topick of argumentation, to ſhew the prevalence of contempt, by the contrary influences of reſpect. South.

His thoughts muſt be maſculine, full of argumentation, and that ſufficiently warm. Dryden.

It is certain, that the whole courſe of his argumentation comes to nothing. Addiſon, Freeholder, N° 31.

A'RROGANCY } taking much upon one's ſelf, that ſpecies of pride which conſiſts in exorbitant claims.

Stanley, notwithſtanding ſhe's your wife,
And loves not me; be you, good lord, aſſur'd,
I hate not you for her proud arrogance. Shakeſp. Rich. III.

Pride hath no other glaſs
To ſhew itſelf but pride; for ſupple knees
Feed arrogance, and are the proud man's fees. Sh. Tr. and Cr.

Pride and arrogance, and the evil way, and the froward mouth do I hate. Prov. viii. 13.

Diſcourſing of matters dubious, and on any controvertible truths, we cannot, without arrogancy, entreat a credibility.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i.

Humility it expreſſes by the ſtooping and bending of the head, arrogance, when it is lifted, or, as we ſay, toſſed up.
Dryden.

ARROGANT. adj. [arrogans, Lat.] Given to make exorbitant claims, haughty, proud.

Feagh's right unto that country which he claims, or the ſignory thereon, muſt be vain and arrogant. Spenſer on Ireland.

An arrogant way of treating with other princes and ſtates, is natural to popular governments. Temple.

A'RROGANTLY. adv. [from arrogant.] In an arrogant manner.

Our poet may
Himſelf admire the fortune of his play,
And arrogantly, as his fellows do,
Think he writes well, becauſe he pleaſes you.
Dryden's Prol. to Indian Emperour.

Another, warm'd
With high ambition, and conceit of proweſs
Inherent, arrogantly thus preſum'd;
What if this ſword, full often drench'd in blood,
Should now cleave cheer the execrable head
Of Ch[a]rl[es] Dryden.

A'RROGANTNESS. n. ſ. [from arrogant.] The ſame with arrogance; which ſee. Dict.

To ARROGATE. v. a. [arrogo, Lat.] To claim vainly, or exhibit unjuſt claims only prompted by pride.

The popes arrogated unto themſelves, that the empire was held of them in homage. Sir Walter Raleigh's Eſſays.

Who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal ſtate,
Will arrogate dominion undeſerv'd,
Over his brethren. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. xii.

Rome never arrogated to herſelf any infallibility, but what ſhe pretended to be founded upon Chriſt's promiſe. Tillot. Pr.

ARROGA'TION. n. ſ. [from arrogate.] A claiming in a proud unjuſt manner. Dict.

ARRO'SION. n. ſ. [from arroſus, Lat.] A gnawing. Dict.

ARROW. n. ſ. [ærepe, Sax.] The pointed weapon which is ſhot from a bow. Darts are thrown by the hand, but in poetry they are confounded.

I ſwear to thee by Cupid's ſtrongeſt bow,
By his beſt arrow with the golden head.
Shakeſp. Midſummer Night's Dream.

Here were boys ſo deſperately reſolved, as to pull arrows out of their fleſh, and deliver them to be ſhot again by the archers on their ſide. Sir J. Hayward.

ARROW HEAD. n. ſ. [from arrow and head.] A water plant, ſo called from the reſemblance of its leaves to the head of an arrow. Dict.

ARROWY. adj. [from arrow.] Conſiſting of arrows.

He ſaw them in their forms of battle rang'd,
How quick they wheel'd, and flying, behind them ſhot
Sharp fleet of arrowy ſhow'r againſt the face
Of their purſuers, and o'ercame by flight. Par. Loſt, b. iii.

ARSE. n. ſ. [ærſe, Sax.] The buttocks, or hind part of an animal.

To hang an ARSE. A vulgar phraſe, ſignifying to be tarry, ſluggiſh, or dilator.

For Hudibras wore but one ſpur,
As wiſely knowing, could he ſtir
To active trot one ſide of's horſe,
The other would not hang an arſe. Hudibras, cant. i.

ARSE FOOT. n. ſ. A kind of water fowl, called alſo a dunlipper. D.

ARSE-SMART. [Perſicaria, Lat.]

It is a plant with an apetalous flower, having ſeveral cloves from the nut-like calyx: the pointal becomes an oval pointed ſmooth ſeed, incloſed in the capſule, which was before the flower-cup, it hath pointed ſtalks, and the flowers are produced in ſpikes. Several ſpecies of this plant grow wild upon moiſt ſoils and ditches. Miller.

A'RSENAL. n. ſ. [arſenale, Ital.] A repoſitory of things requiſite to war, a magazine.

There are arſenicum, or other like noxious minerals lodged underneath. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

ARSENICK n. ſ. [ἀρσενικὸν.] A ponderous mineral ſubſtance volatile and alſo flammable, which gives a white [illegible] in fuſion, and proves a violent corroſive poiſon, of which there are three ſorts. Native or yellow arſenick, called alſo auripigmentum or orpiment, is chiefly found in copper mines, in a ſort of globes or ſtones of different figures and ſizes. Its colour, though always yellow, yet admits of different ſhades and mixtures, as a golden yellow, a reddiſh yellow, or a green yellow. It contains a ſmall portion of gold, but not worth the expence of ſeparating it. White or cryſtalline arſenick is extracted from the native kind, by ſublimating it with a proportion of ſea ſalt, and is chiefly uſed among us. It is ſaid to be found at ſome German mines. The ſmalleſt quantity of cryſtalline arſenick, being mixed with any metal, abſolutely deſtroys its malleability, and a ſingle grain will turn a pound of copper [illegible] beautiful ſeeming ſilver, but without ductility. There is a method practiſed in Hungary, of procuring yellow and white arſenick from cobalt. Red arſenick is a preparation of the white, made by adding to it a mineral ſulphur. There are ſeveral chymical preparations of arſenick, intended to blunt its corroſive ſalts, and render it a ſafe medicine; but experience [illegible] that it ſhould never be uſed inwardly, in any form.

Arſenick is a very deadly poiſon; held to the fire, it emits fumes, but laſts very little. Woodw. on Foſſ.

ART n. ſ. [arte, Fr. ars, Lat.]

1. The power of doing ſomething not taught by nature and inſtinct, as, to weave is nature, to dance is an art.

As for the daughters of king Edward IV they thought king Richard had said enough for them; and took them to be but as of the king's party, because they were in his power, and at his disposal. Bacon's Henry VII.

11. While, at the same time that.

At either end, it whirled as it flew,
And as the brands were green, so dropp'd the dew,
Incensed as it fell with sweat of sanguine hue. Dryd. Fab.

I never haughty words A[illegible]o's rage provoke,
And frighted Turnus trembled as she spoke. Dryden's Æn.

So the pure limpid stream, when foul with stains
Of rushing torrents, and descending rains,
Works itself clear, and as it runs refines. A.

12. Because.

He that commanded the injury to be done, is first bound, then he that did it; and they also are obliged who did so assist, as without them the thing could not have been done. Taylor.

13. As being.

The kernels draw out of the earth juice fit to nourish the tree, as those that would be trees themselves. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

14. Equally.

Before the place
A hundred doors a hundred entries grace;
As many voices issue, and the sound
Of Sibyl's word as many times rebound Dryden's Æn.

15. How; in what manner.

Men are generally permitted to publish books, and contradict others, and even themselves, as they please, without danger of being confuted, as of being understood.

16. With; answering to like or same.

Sister, well met; whither away so fast?—
—No further than the Tower, and, as I guess,
Upon the like devotion as yourselves,
To gratulate the gentle princes there. Shakesp. Richard III.

17. In a reciprocal sense, answering to as.

Every offence committed in the state of nature, may, in the state of nature, be also punished, and as far forth as it may in a commonwealth. Locke.

As sure as it is good, that human nature should exist, so certain it is, that the circular revolutions of the earth and planets, rather than other motions which might as possibly have been, do declare God. Bentley's Sermons.

18. Going before as, in a comparative sense, the first as being sometimes understood.

Sempronius is as brave a man as Cato. Addison's Cato.

Bright as the sun, and like the morning fair. Granville.

19. Answering to such.

It [illegible] every man's interest, that there should be such a governour of the world as designs our happiness, as would govern us for our advantage. Tillotson.

20. Having so to answer in a conditional sense.

As far as they carry light and conviction to any other man's understanding, so far, I hope, my labour may be of use to him. Locke.

21. As sometimes understood.

As in my speculations I have endeavoured to extinguish passion and prejudice, I am still desirous of doing some good in this particular. Spectator, N° 126.

22. Answering to so conditionally.

So may th' suspicious queen of love,
To thee, O sacred ship, be kind,
As thou to whom the muse commends,
The best of poets and of friends,
Dost thy commanded pledge restore. Dryden.

23. Before how it is sometimes redundant, but this is in low language.

As how, dear Syphax? Addison's Cato.

24. It seems to be redundant before yet, to this time.

Though that war continued nine years, and this hath as yet lasted but six, yet there hath been much more action in the present war. Addison.

25. In a sense of comparison, followed by so.

As when a dab-chick waddles through the copse
On feet and wings, and flies, and wades, and hops,
So labouring on, with shoulders, hands, and head,
Wide as a windmill all his figure spread. Pope's Dunciad.

26. As FOR; with respect to.

As for the rest of those who have written against me, they deserve not the least notice. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

27. As IF; in the same manner that it would be, if.

Answering their questions, as if it were a matter that needed it. Locke.

28. As TO; with respect to.

I pray thee, speak to me as to thy thinkings,
As thou dost ruminate; and give thy worst of thoughts
The worst of words. Shakesp. Othello.

They pretend, in general, to great refinements, as to what regards christianity. Addison on Italy.

I [illegible]ken as to the day, placing that accident about thirty-six hours sooner than it happened. Swift.

29. As WELL AS, equally with.

Each man's mind has some peculiarity, as well as his face, [illegible]nguishes him from all others. Locke.

It is adorned with admirable pieces of sculpture, as well modern as ancient. Addison on Italy.

30. As THOUGH; as if.

These should be at first gently treated, as though we expected an improvement. Sharp's Surgery.

ASA DULCIS. See BENZOIN.

ASA FOETIDA } n. s. A gum or resin brought from the East
ASSA FOETIDA. } Indies, of a sharp taste, and a strong offensive smell, which is said to debil, during the heat of summer, from a little shrub, frequent in Media, Persia, Assyria, and Arabia. It is at first white, borrowing on yellow, then on red, and, lastly, violet; and melts under the fingers like wax. It is own efficacy in some uterine disorders; but the rankness of its smell occasions it to be seldom used but by farriers, yet, in the East Indies, it makes an ingredient in their rago.

ASARABACCA n. s. [asarum, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The flower cup is divided into four parts, and the fruit into six cells, filled with oblong seeds. The leaves are roundish, thick, and almost of the colour of those of the ivy tree. There are two sorts, the common asarabacca, and that of Canada. The first sort is used in medicine. It delights in a moist shady place, and is increased by parting the roots in autumn. Miller

ASBESTINE. adj. [from asbestos.] Something incombustible, or that partakes of the nature and qualities of the lapis asbestos.

ASBESTOS n. s. [ἄσβεστος.] A sort of native fossile stone, which may be split into threads and filaments, from one inch to ten inches in length, very fine, brittle, yet somewhat tractable, silky, and of a greyish colour, not unlike that of Venice. It is almost insipid to the taste, indissoluble in water, and endued with the wonderful property of remaining unconsumed in the fire, which only whitens it. But, notwithstanding the common opinion, in two trials before the Royal Society, a piece of cloth made of this stone was found to lose a dram of its weight each time. Paper as well as cloth has been made of this stone, and Pliny says he had seen napkins of it, which, being taken foul from the table, were thrown into the fire, and better scowered than if they had been washed in water. It is found in many places of Asia and Europe, particularly in the island of Anglesey in Wales, and in Aberdeenshire in Scotland. Chambers.

ASCARIDES n. s. [ἀσκαρὶς, from ἀσκαρίζω, to leap.] Little worms in the rectum, so called from their continual troublesome motion, causing an intolerable itching. Quincy.

To ASCEND. v. n. [ascendo, Lat.]

To hunt with swift ascent he up returned,
Into his blissful bosom reassumed
In glory, as of old. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

2. The way by which one ascends.

The temple, and the several degrees of ascent, whereby men did climb up to the same, as if it had been a scala cœli, be all poetical and fabulous. Bacon's New Atlant.

It was a rock
Conspicuous far; winding with one ascent Accessible from earth, one entrance high. Par. Lost, c. .

3. An eminence, or high place.

No land like Italy erects the sight,
By such a vast ascent, or swells to such a height. Addison.

A wide flat cannot be pleasant in the Elysian fields, unless it be diversified with depressed valleys and swelling ascents. Bentl.

To ASCERTAIN. v. a. [ascertener, Fr.]

1. To make certain; to fix, to establish.

The divine law both ascertaineth the truth, and supplieth unto us the want of other laws. Hooker, b. .

Money differs from uncoined silver in this, that the quantity of silver in each piece is ascertained by the stamp. Locke.

2. To make confident; to take away doubt; often with of.

If it be an right judgment of myself, it may give me the other certainty, that is, ascertain me that I am in the number of God's children. Hammond's Practical Catechism.

Ash, n. s. [fraxinus, Lat. æsc, Saxon.]

This tree hath pennated leaves, which end in an odd lobe. The male flowers, which grow at a remote distance from the fruit, have no petals, but consist of many stamina. The ovary becomes a seed vessel, containing one seed at the bottom, shaped like a bird's tongue. The species are, 1. The common ash tree. 2. The stripped ash. 3. The manna ash, &c. The first sort is a common timber tree in every part of England. The second is a variety of the first. The third sort is supposed to be the tree from whence the true Calabrian manna is taken. The timber is of excellent use to the wheelwright and cartwright. Miller.

Let me twine
Mine arms about that body, where against
My grained ash an hundred times hath broke,
And scar'd the moon with splinters. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

With which of old he charm'd the savage train,
And call'd the mountain ashes to the plain. Dryd. Silenus.

Ash coloured. adj. [from ash and colour] Coloured between brown and grey, like the bark of an ashen branch.

Clay, ash-coloured, was part of a stratum which lay above the strata of stone. Woodward on Fossils

Asha'med. adj. [from shame.] Touched with shame; generally with of before the cause of shame.

Profess publickly the doctrine of Jesus Christ, not being ashamed of the word of God, or of any practices enjoined by it. [illegible]

One would have thought she would have turn'd, but strove
With modesty, and was asham'd to move. Dryd. Fables

This I have shadowed, that you may not be ashamed of that hero, whose protection you undertake. Dryd. Conq. of Gr. Ded.

A'shen. adj. [from ash.] Made of ash wood.

At once he said, and threw
His ashen spear; which quiver'd as it flew. Dryden.

Ashes. n. s. wants the singular. [æsca, Sax. asche, Dutch]

1. The remains of any thing burnt.

Some relicks would be left of it, as when ashes remain of burned bodies. Digby on Bodies.

This late dissension, grown betwixt the peers,
Burns under feigned ashes of forg'd love,
And will at last break out into a flame. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Ashes contain a very fertile salt, and are the best manure for cold lands, if kept dry, that the rain doth not wash away their salt Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. The remains of the body, often used in poetry for the carcase, from the ancient practice of burning the dead.

Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster!
Thou bloodless remnant of that royal blood! Shak. R. III.

To great Laertes I bequeath
A task of grief, his ornaments of death,
Left, when the fates his royal ashes claim,
The Grecian matrons taint my spotless name. Pope.

A'sinine adj. [from asinus, Lat.] Belonging to an ass.

You shall have more ado to drive our dullest youth, our stocks and stubs, from such nurture, than we have now to hale our choicest and hopefullest wits to that asinine feast of sow thistles and brambles. Milt. on Education.

To Ask v. a. [ærcian, Saxon.]

1. To petition; to beg; sometimes with an accusative only; sometimes with for

When thou dost ask me blessing, I'll kneel down,
And ask of thee forgiveness. Shakesp. King Lear.

We have nothing else to ask, but that
Which you deny already: yet will ask,
That, if we fail in our request, the blame
May hang upon your hardness. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

My son, hast thou sinned? do so no more, but ask pardon for thy former sins. Eccles. xxi.

If he ask for bread, will he give him a stone? Matt. vii. 9.

In long journies, ask your master leave to give ale to the horses. Swift.

To demand; to claim; as, to ask a price for goods.

Ask me never so much dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say unto me: but give me the damsel to [illegible] Gen. xxxi.

He saw his friends, who, whelm'd beneath the waves,
Their funeral honours claim'd, and ask'd their quiet graves.
Dryden's Æneid.

3. To enquire, to question; with for before the thing, and sometimes of before the person.

Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. Jerem. vi. 16.

For ask now of the days that are past, which were before thee, since the day that God created man upon the earth, and ask from the one side of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any such thing as this great thing is, or hath been heard like it. Deut. iv.

O inhabitant of Aroer, stand by the way and espy, ask him that fleeth, and her that escapeth, and say, what is done? Jeremiah, xlviii. 19.

ASKE'W. adv. [from a and skew.] Aside; with contempt, contemptuously, disdainfully.

For when ye mildly look with lovely hue,
Then is my soul with life and love inspir'd.
But when ye lowre, or look on me askew,
Then do I die. Spenser, Sonnet xv.

Then take it, Sir, as it was writ,
Nor look askew at what it saith;
There's no position in it. ——— Prior.

To ASLA'KE. v. a. [from a and slake, or slack.] To remit, to abate; to slacken.

But this continual, cruel, civil war,
No skill can stint, nor reason can aslake. Spenser, Son. xliv.

Whilst seeking to aslake thy raging fire,
Thou in me kindlest much more great desire. Spenser.

ASLA'NT. adv. [from a and slant.] Obliquely; on one side; not perpendicularly.

There is a willow grows aslant a brook,
That shews his hoar leaves in the glassy stream. Sh. Hamlet.

He fell, the shaft
Drove through his neck aslant; he spurns the ground,
And the foul issues through the weazon's wound. Dryden.

Aslant the dew-bright earth, and colour'd air,
He looks in boundless majesty abroad. Thomson's Summer.

A [illegible] [from a and sleep]

1. Sleeping; at rest.

How many thousands of my poorest subjects
Are at this hour asleep! O gentle sleep,
Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee! Sh. H. IV.

The diligence of trade, and noiseful gain,
And luxury more late asleep were laid
All was the night's, and, in her silent reign,
No sound the rest of nature did invade. Dryden's Ann. M.

There is no difference between a person asleep, and in an apoplexy, but that the one can be awaked, and the other cannot. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ASTHMA. n. s. [ἄσθμα.] A frequent, difficult, and short respiration, joined with a hissing sound and a cough, especially in the night-time, and when the body is in a prone posture, because then the contents of the lower belly bear so against the diaphragm, as to lessen the capacity of the breast, whereby the lungs have less room to move. Quincy.

An asthma is the inflammation of the membranes of the lungs, and of the membranes covering the muscles of the thorax, but does not continue long. Floyer on the Humours

ASTHMA'TICAL } adj. [from asthma.] Troubled with an ASTHMA'TICK. } asthma.

In asthmatical persons, we often see, that though the lungs be very much stuffed with tough phlegm, yet the patient may live some months, if not some years. Boyle.

After drinking, our horses are most asthmatick; and, for avoiding the watering of them, we wet their hay.
Howell on the Horse.

ASTE'RN. adv. [from a and stern.] In the hinder part of the ship; behind the ship.

The galley gives her side, and turns her prow,
While those astern descending down the steep,
Thro' gaping waves behold the boiling deep. Dryden.

To ASTE'RT v. a. [a word used by Spenser, as it seems, for start, or startle.] To terrify; to startle; to fright.

We deem of death, as doom of ill desert,
But knew we fools what it us brings until,
Die would we daily, once it to expert;
No danger there the shepherd can astert. Spens. Past.

ASTO'NIED. participial adj A word used in the version of the bible for astonished.

Many were astonied at thee. Isaiah, lii. 14.

To ASTO'NISH v. a. [estonner, Fr. from attonitus, Lat.] To confound with some sudden passion, as with fear or wonder, to amaze; to surprise.

It is the part of men to fear and tremble,
When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send
Such dreadful heralds to astonish us. Shak. Julius Cæsar.

Astonish'd at the voice, he stood amaz'd,
And all around with inward horror gaz'd. Addison's Ovid.

A genius universal as his theme,
Astonishing as chaos. Young.

ASTO'NISHINGNESS n. s. [from astonish.] Of a nature to excite astonishment

ASTO'NISHMENT. n. s. [estonnement, Fr.] Amazement, confusion of mind from fear or wonder.

We found, with no less wonder to us, than astonishment to themselves, that they were the two valiant and famous brothers. Sidney, b.

She esteemed this as much above his wisdom, as astonishment is beyond bare admiration. South.

To ASTO'UND. v. a. [estonner, Fr.] To astonish; to confound with fear or wonder This word is now somewhat obsolete.

These thoughts may startle well, but not astound
The virtuous mind, that ever walks attended
By a strong siding champion, conscience. Paradise Regain'd.

ASTRA'DDLE. adv. [from a and straddle.] With one's legs across any thing Dict.

A'STRAGAL. n. s. [ἀστράγαλος, the ankle, or ankle-bone.] A little round member, in the form of a ring or bracelet, serving as an ornament at the tops and bottoms of columns. Builder's Dict.

We see none of that ordinary confusion, which is the result of quarter rounds of the astragal, and I know not how many other intermingled particulars. Spectator, N° 415.

A'STRAL. adj. [from astrum, Lat.] Starry; relating to the stars.

Some astral forms I must invoke by pray'r,
Fram'd all of purest atoms of the air,
Not in their natures simply good or ill,
But most subservient to bad spirits will. Dryd. Tyran. Love.

ASTRA'Y adv. [from a and stray.] Out of the right way.

May seem the wain was very evil led,
When such an one had guiding of the way,
That knew not, whether right he went, or else astray. F. Q.

You run astray, for whilst we talk of Ireland, you rip up the original of Scotland Spenser on Ireland.

Like one that had been led astray
Through the heav'n's wide pathless way. Milt. Il Penseroso.

To ASTRICT. v. a. [astringo, Lat.] To contract by applications, in opposition to relax: a word not so much used as constringe

The fluid parts were to be relaxed or astricted, as they let the humours pass either in too small or too great quantities.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ASTRI'CTION. n. s. [astrictio, Lat.] The act or power of contracting the parts of the body by application.

Astriction is in a substance that hath a virtual cold; and it worketh partly by the same means that cold doth. Bacon.

This virtue requireth an astriction, but such an astriction as is not grateful to the body; for a pleasing astriction doth rather bind in the nerves than expel them and therefore such astriction is found in things of a harsh taste. Bacon's Nat. History.

Such lenitive substances are proper for dry atrabilarian constitutions, who are subject to astriction of the belly and the piles.
Arbuthnot on Diet.

ASTRI'CTIVE. adj. [from astrict.] Styptick, of astringent quality. Dict.

ASTRI'CTORY. adj [astrictorius, Lat.] Astringent; apt to bind. Dict.

ASTRI'DE. adv. [from a and stride.] With the legs open.

To lay their native arms aside,
Their modesty, and ride astride Hudibras.

I saw a place, where the Rhone is so straitened between two rocks, that a man may stand astride upon both at once. Boyle.

ASTRI'FEROUS. adj. [astrifer, Lat.] Bearing, or having stars Dict.

ASTRI'GEROUS. adj. [astriger, Lat.] Adorned with stars. Dict.

To ASTRINGE. v. a. [astringo, Lat.] To press by contraction, to make the parts draw together

Tears are caused by a contraction of the spirits of the brain; which contraction, by consequence, astringeth the moisture of the brain, and thereby sendeth tears into the eyes. Bacon.

ASTRI'NGENCY. n. s. [from astringe.] The power of contracting the parts of the body; opposed to the power of relaxation

Astriction prohibiteth dissolution; as, in medicines, astringents inhibit putrefaction and, by astringency, some small quantity of oil of vitriol will keep fresh water long from putrefying.
Bacon's Natural History, N° 342.

Acid, acrid, austere, and bitter substances, by their astringency, create horrour, that is, irritate the fibres. Arbuthnot.

ASTRI'NGENT. adj. [astringens, Lat.] Binding, contracting, opposed to laxative

Aſtringent medicines are binding, which act by the aſperity of their particles, whereby they corrugate the membranes, and make them draw up cloſer. Quincy.

The juice is very aſtringent, and therefore of ſlow motion. Grew's Nat. Hiſt.

What diminiſheth ſenſible perſpiration, increaſeth the inſenſible; for that reaſon a ſtrengthening and aſtringent diet often conduceth to this purpoſe. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ASTROGRAPHY. n. ſ. [from ἀστὴρ and γράφω.] The ſcience of deſcribing the ſtars. Dict.

ASTROLABE. n. ſ. [ἀστρολάβον, of ἀστὴρ, and λαμβάνω, to take.]

1. An inſtrument chiefly uſed for taking the altitude of the pole, the ſun or ſtars, at ſea.
2. A ſtereographick projection of the circles of the ſphere upon the plane of ſome great circle. Chambers.

ASTRO'LOGER. n. ſ. [aſtrologus, Lat. from ἀστὴρ and λόγος.]

1. One that, ſuppoſing the influences of the ſtars to have a cauſal power, profeſſes to foretel or diſcover events depending on thoſe influences.

Not unlike that which aſtrologers call a conjunction of planets, of no very benign aſpect the one to the other. Watts.

A happy genius is the gift of nature. It depends on the influence of the ſtars, ſay the aſtrologers, on the organs of the body, ſay the naturaliſts, it is the particular gift of heaven, ſay the divines, both chriſtians and heathens. Dryd. Pr. Diſc.

Aſtrologers, that future fates foreſhew. Pope.

I never heard a finer ſatire againſt lawyers, than that of aſtrologers, when they pretend, by rules of art, to tell when a ſuit will end, and whether to the advantage of the plaintiff or defendant. Swift.

2. It was anciently uſed for one that underſtood or explained the motions of the planets, without regarding prediction.

A worthy aſtrologer now living, who, by the help of perſpective glaſſes, hath found in the ſtars many things unknown to the ancients, affirms ſuch to have been diſcovered in Venus. Raleigh's Hiſt. of the World.

ASTROLO'GIAN. n. ſ. [from aſtrology.] The ſame with aſtrologer.

The twelve houſes of heaven, in the form which aſtrologians uſe. Camden.

The ſtars, they ſay, cannot diſpoſe,
No more than can the aſtrologian. Hudibras.

ASTROLO'GICAL. adj. [from aſtrology.] Relating to aſtrology; [illegible]

Some ſeem a little aſtrological, as when they warn us from places of malign influence. Watton.

No aſtrologick wizard honour gains,
Who has not oft been baniſh'd, or in chains. Dryd. Juv.

Aſtrological prayers ſeem to me to be built on as good reaſon as the predictions. Stillingfl. Def. of Diſc. on R. Idol.

The poetical fables are more ancient than the aſtrological influences, that were not known to the Greeks till after Alexander the Great. Bentley's Sermons.

ASTROLO'GICALLY. adv. [from aſtrology.] In an aſtrological [illegible]

To ASTRO'LOGIZE. v. n. [from aſtrology.] To practiſe aſtrology.

ASTROLOGY. n. ſ. [aſtrologia, Lat.] The practice of foretelling things by the knowledge of the ſtars; an art now generally exploded, as without reaſon.

I know it hath been the opinion of the learned, who think of the art of aſtrology, that the ſtars do not force the actions or [illegible] of men. Swift.

ASTRO'NOMER. n. ſ. [from ἄστρον, a ſtar, and νόμος, a rule or law.] He that ſtudies the celeſtial motions, and the rules by which they are governed.

The motions of factions under kings, ought to be like the motions, as the aſtronomers ſpeak of, in the inferiour orbs. Bacon.

The old and new aſtronomers in vain
Attempt the heav'nly motions to explain. Blackmore.

Since aſtronomers no longer doubt of the motion of the planets about the ſun, it is fit to proceed upon that hypotheſis. Locke.

ASTRONO'MICAL. } adj. [from aſtronomy.] Belonging to aſtro-
ASTRONO'MICK. } nomy.

Our forefathers marking certain mutations to happen in the ſun's progreſs through the zodiack, they regiſtrate and ſet them down in their aſtronomical canons. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Can he not paſs an aſtronomick line,
Or does he dread th' imaginary ſign,
That he ſhould never advance to either pole. Blackmore.

ASTRONO'MICALLY. adv. [from aſtronomical.] In an aſtronomical manner.

ASTRONOMY. n. ſ. [ἀστρονομία, from ἄστρον, a ſtar, and νόμος, a law, or rule.] A mixed mathematical ſcience teaching the knowledge of the celeſtial bodies, their magnitudes, motions, diſtances, periods, eclipſes, and order. The origin of aſtronomy is uncertain; but from Egypt it travelled into Greece, where Pythagoras was the firſt European who taught that the earth and planets turn round the ſun, which ſtands immoveable in the center, as he himſelf had been inſtructed by the Egyptian prieſts. From the time of Pythagoras, aſtronomy ſunk [illegible] to neglect, that it was revived by the Ptolemys, kings of Egypt; and the Saracens, after their conqueſt of that country, having acquired ſome knowledge of it, brought it from Africa to Spain, and again reſtored this ſcience to Europe, where it has ſince received very conſiderable improvements. Chambers.

To this muſt be added the underſtanding of the globes, and the principles of geometry and aſtronomy. Cowley.

ASTROSCOPY. n. ſ. [ἀστρὴρ, a ſtar, and σκοπέω, to view.] Obſervation of the ſtars. Dict.

[illegible] n. ſ. [from aſtrum, a ſtar, and theologia, diſcourſe] [illegible] founded on the obſervation of the celeſtial [illegible].

That the diurnal and annual revolutions are the motions of the terraqueous globe, not of the ſun, I ſhew in the preface of [illegible].

ASU'NDER. adv. [ġeunðpan, Sax.] Apart, ſeparately, not together.

Two indirect lines, the further that they are drawn out, the further they go aſunder. Spenſer on Ireland.

Senſe thinks the planets ſpheres not much aſunder,
What tells us then their diſtance is ſo far. Sir J. Davies.

Greedy hope to find
His wiſh, and beſt advantage, us aſunder. Paradiſe Loſt, b. ix.

The fall'n archangel, envious of our ſtate,
Seeks had advantage to betray us worſe,
Which, when aſunder, will not prove too hard,
For both together are each other's guard. Dryd. State of Inn.

Born far aſunder by the tides of men,
Like adamant and ſteel they meet again. Dryd. Fables.

All this metallick matter, both that which continued aſunder, and in ſingle corpuſcles, and that which was attached and concreted into nodules, fabricked. Woodward's Nat. Hiſt.

ASY'LUM. n. ſ. [Lat. ἄσυλον, from ἀ, not, and σύλαω, to pillage.] A place out of which he that has fled to it, may not be taken, a ſanctuary, a refuge.

BALLAD. n. ſ. [ballade, Fr.] A ſong.

Ballad once ſignified a ſolemn and ſacred ſong, as well as trivial, when Solomon's Song was called the ballad of ballads, but now it is applied to nothing but trifling verſe. Watts.

[illegible] tunes, may a cup of ſack be my poiſon Shakeſp. Henry IV.

Like the ſweet ballad, this amuſing lay
Too long detains the lover on his way Gay's Trivia.

To BALLAD. v. n. [from the noun.] To make or ſing ballads.

Saucy lictors
Will catch at us like ſtrumpets, and ſcald rhimers
Ballad us out o' tune. Shakeſp. Antony and Cleopatra.

BALLAD-SINGER. n. ſ. [from ballad and ſing.] One whoſe employment it is to ſing ballads in the ſtreets.

No ſooner 'gan he raiſe his tuneful ſong,
But lads and laſſes round about him throng.
Not ballad-ſinger, plac'd above the crowd,
Sings with a note ſo ſhrilling, ſweet and loud. Gay.

[illegible]

1. Something put at the bottom of the ſhip to keep it ſteady to the center of gravity.

There muſt be ſome middle counſellors to keep things ſteady, for, without that ballaſt, the ſhip will roul too much. Bacon's Eſſays.

As for the aſcent of it, this may be eaſily contrived, if there be ſome great weight at the bottom of the ſhip, being part of its ballaſt; which, by ſome cord within, may be looſened from it. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

As when empty barks or billows float,
With ſandy ballaſt ſailors trim the boat,
So bees bear gravel ſtones, whoſe poiſing weight
Steers through the whiſtling winds their ſteddy flight. Dryd.

2. That which is uſed to make any thing ſteady.

Why ſhould he ſink where nothing ſeem'd to preſs?
His lading air, and his ballaſt eaſe. Swift.

BA'RKY. adj. [from bark.] Consisting of bark, containing bark.
Ivy so entrings the barky fingers of the elm.
Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

BARLEY. n. f. [derived by Junius from בר.]
It hath a thick spike; the calyx, husk, awn, and flower, are like those of wheat or rye, but the awns are rough, the seed is swelling in the middle, and, for the most part, ends in a sharp point, to which the husks are closely united. The species are, 1. Common long-eared barley. 2. Winter or square barley, by some called big. 3. Sprat barley, or battledoor barley. All these sorts of barley are sown in the spring of the year, in a dry time. In some very dry light land, the barley is sown early in March; but in strong clayey soils it is not sown till April. The square barley, or big, is chiefly cultivated in the north of England, and in Scotland; and is hardier than the other sorts. Where barley is sown upon new broken up land, the usual method is to plough up the land in March, and let it lie fallow until June; at which time it is ploughed again, and sown with turneps, which are eaten by sheep in winter, by whose dung the land is greatly improved; and then, in March following, the ground is ploughed again, and sown with barley. Miller.
Barley is emollient, moistening, and expectorating; barley was chosen by Hippocrates as proper food in inflammatory distempers. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

BA'RLEY-BRAKE. n. f. A kind of rural play.
By neighbours prais'd she went abroad thereby,
At barleybrake her sweet swift feet to try. Sidney.

BARLEY BROTH. n. f. [from barley and broth.] A low word, sometimes used for strong beer.
Can soaden water,
A drench for surreyn'd jades, their barley broth,
Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat? Shak. Hen. V.

BARLEY CORN. n. f. [from barley and corn.] A grain of barley, the beginning of our measure of length, the third part of an inch.
A long, long journey, choak'd with brakes and thorns,
Unmeasur'd by ten thousand barley corns. Tickell.

BARLEY MOW. n. f. [from barley and mow.] The place where reaped barley is stowed up.
Whenever by yon barley mow I pass,
Before my eyes will trip the tidy lass. Gay's Pastorals.

BARM. n. f. [barm, Welch; beorm, Sax.] Yeast, the ferment put into drink to make it work, and into bread, to lighten and swell it.
Are you not he
That sometimes make the drink to bear no barm?
Mislead light wanderers, laughing at their harm? Shakespear
You may try the force of imagination, upon slaying the working of beer when the barm is put into it.
Bacon's Nat. History, N° 992.

BA'RMY. adj. [from barm.] Containing barm
Their joyful nights in frolicks and in play
They pass, to drive the tedious hours away,
And their cold stomachs with crown'd goblets cheer
Of windy cider, and of barmy beer. Dryden's Virgil.

BARN. n. f. [beapn, Sax.] A place or house for laying up any sort of grain, hay, or straw, &c.
In vain the barns expect their promis'd load,
Nor barns at home, nor reeks are heap'd abroad. Dryden.
I took notice of the make of several barns here, after having laid a frame of wood, they place, at the four corners of it, four blocks, in such a shape as neither mice nor vermin can creep up. Addison on Italy.

BARNACLE. n. f. [probably of beapn, Sax. a child, and ac, Sax an oak.]

3. A bird like a goose, fabulously supposed to grow on trees.

Surely it is beyond even an atheist's credulity and impudence, to affirm that the first men might grow upon trees, as the story goes about barnacles, or perhaps might be the race of some vast prodigious animals, whose species is now extinct. Bentley's Sermons.

And from the most refin'd of saints,
As naturally grow miscreants,
As barnacles turn solan geese
In th' islands of the Orcades. Hudibras, p. ii. c. i.

2. An instrument made commonly of iron for the use of farriers, to hold a horse by the nose, to hinder him from struggling when any thing is done. Farrier's Dict.

BAROMETER. n. s. [from βαρος, weight, and μετρεω, measure.] A machine for measuring the weight of the atmosphere, and the variations in it, in order chiefly to determine the changes of the weather. It differs from the baroscope, which only shews that the air is heavier at one time than another, without specifying the difference. The barometer is founded upon the Torricellian experiment, so called from Torricelli the inventor of it, at Florence, in 1643, which is a glass tube filled with mercury, horizontally sealed at one end, the other open and immerged in a bason of stagnant mercury, so that, as the weight of the atmosphere diminishes, the mercury in the tube will descend, and, as it encreases, the mercury will ascend, the column of mercury suspended in the tube, being always equal to the weight of the incumbent atmosphere. Many attempts have been made to render the changes in the barometer more sensible, in order to measure the atmosphere more accurately, and hence arose a great number of barometers, of different structures. Dr. Halley observes, in the Philosophical Transactions, that in calm weather, when the air is inclined to rain, the mercury is commonly low, in serene good settled weather, high. On great winds, though unaccompanied with rain, the mercury is lowest of all, with regard to the point of the compass the wind blows on. The greatest heights of the mercury are on easterly and north-easterly winds, exteris paribus. After great storms of wind, when the mercury has been low, it rises again very fast. In calm frosty weather, it stands high. The more northerly places find greater alterations than the more southern; and within the tropicks, and near them, there is little or no variation of the height of the mercury. The rising of the mercury forebodes fair weather after foul, and an easterly or north-easterly wind; its falling portends southerly or westerly winds, sure sign that it begins to abate. But there are frequently great changes in the air, without any perceptible alteration in the barometer. The alterations of the weight of the air, are generally allowed to be the cause of those in the barometer, but philosophers cannot easily determine whence those alterations arise in the atmosphere.

The measuring the heights of mountains, and finding the elevation of places above the level of the sea, hath been much promoted by barometrical experiments, founded upon that central property of the air, its gravity or pressure. As the column of mercury in the barometer is counterpoised by a column of air of equal weight, so whatever causes make the air heavier or lighter, the pressure of it will be thereby encreased or lessened, and of consequence the mercury will rise or fall. Again, the air is condensed or expanded, in proportion to the weight or force that presses it. Hence it is, that the higher from the sea, in the midland countries, the mercury descends the lower, because the air becomes more rarified and lighter, and it falls lowest upon the tops of the highest mountains. Harris.

Gravity is another property of air, whereby it counterpoises a column of mercury from twenty-seven inches and one half to thirty and one half, the gravity of the atmosphere varying one tenth, which are its utmost limits, so that the exact specifick gravity of the air cannot be determined when the barometer stands at thirty inches, with a moderate heat of the weather. Arbuthnot on Air.

BAROMETRICAL. adj. [from barometer.] Relating to the barometer.

He is very accurate in making barometrical and thermometrical instruments. Derham's Physico-Theology.

BA'RON. n. s. [The etymology of this word is very uncertain. Baro, among the Romans, signified a brave warrour, or a brutal man, and, from the first of these significations, Menage derives baron, as a term of military dignity. Others suppose it to signify only a man; in which sense baron, or varon, is still used by the Spaniards, and, to confirm this conjecture, our law yet uses baron and femme, husband and wife. Others deduce it from ber, an old Gaulish word, signifying commander, others from the Hebrew בר, of the same import. Some think it a contraction of par homme, or prer, which seems least probable.]

1. A degree of nobility next to a count. It may be probably thought, that anciently, in England, all those were called barons, that had such signiories as we now call court barons. And it is said, that, after the conquest, all such came to the parliament, and sat as nobles in the upper house. But when, by experience, it appeared, that the parliament was too much crouded with such multitudes, it became a custom, that none should come, but such as the king, for their extraordinary wisdom or quality, thought good to call by writ; which writ ran hac vice tantum. After that, men, seeing that this state of nobility was but casual, and depending merely on the prince's pleasure, obtained of the king letters patent of this dignity to them and their heirs male: and these were called barons by letters patent, or by creation, whose posterity are now those barons that are called lords of the parliament, of which kind the king may create more at his pleasure. It is nevertheless thought, that there are yet barons by writ, as well as barons by letters patent, and that they may be discerned by their titles, the barons by writ being those, that to the title of lord have their own surnames annexed, whereas the barons by letters patent, are named by their baronies. These barons which were first by writ, may now justly also be called barons by prescription, for that they have continued barons, in themselves and their ancestors, beyond the memory of man. There are also barons by tenure, as the bishops of the land, who, by virtue of baronies annexed to their bishopricks, have always had place in the upper house of parliament, and are called lords spiritual.

2. Baron is an officer, as barons of the exchequer to the king, of these the principal is called lord chief baron, and the three others are his assistants, between the king and his subjects, in causes of office, belonging to the exchequer.

3. There are also barons of the cinque ports; two to each of the seven towns, Hastings, Winchelsea, Rye, Rumney, Hithe, Dover, and Sandwich, that have places in the lower house of parliament. Cowel.

They that bear
The cloth of state above, are four barons

BA'RONESS. n. s. [baronesse, Ital. baronissa, Lat.] A baron's lady.

BA'RONET. n. s. [of baron and et, diminutive termination.] The lowest degree of honour that is hereditary, it is below a baron and above a knight, and has the precedency of all other knights, except the knights of the garter. It was first founded by king James I. A. D. 1611. Cowel. But it appears by the following passage, that the term was in use before, though in another sense.

King Edward III. being hearded and crossed by the clergy, they being too strong for him, so as he could not order and reform things, was advised to direct out his writs to certain gentlemen of the best abilities, entitling them therein barons in the next parliament. By which means he had so many barons in his parliament, as were able to weigh down the clergy; which barons were not afterwards lords, but baronets, as sundry of them do yet retain the name. Spenser on Ireland.

BA'RONY. n. s. [baronnie, Fr. beonny, Sax.] That honour or lordship that gives title to a baron. Such are not only the fees of temporal barons, but of bishops also. Cowel.

BA'ROSCOPE. n. s. [βαρος and σκοπεω.] An instrument to shew the weight of the atmosphere. See BAROMETER.

If there was always a calm, the equilibrium could only be changed by the contents; where the winds are not variable, the alterations of the baroscope are very small. Arbuth. on Air.

BA'RRACAN. n. s. [bouracan, or barracan, Fr.] A strong thick kind of camelot.

Tell him his pranks have been too broad to bear with. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Bear with me then, if lawful what I ask. Paradise Lost.

BEAR. n. s. [bera, Saxon.]

1. A rough savage animal.

Every part of the body of these animals is covered with thick shaggy hair, of a dark brown colour, and their claws are hooked, which they use in climbing trees. They feed upon fruits, honey, bees, and flesh. Some have falsely reported, that bears bring their young into the world shapeless, and that their dams lick them into form. The dams go no longer than thirty days, and generally produce five young ones. In the winter, they lie hid and asleep, the male forty days, and the female four months, and so soundly for the first fourteen days, that blows will not wake them. In the sleepy season, they are said to have no nourishment but from licking their feet; for it is certain they eat nothing, and, at the end of it, the males are very fat. This animal has naturally an hideous look, but when enraged it is terrible; and, as rough and stupid as it seems to be, it is capable of discipline, it leaps, dances, and plays a thousand little tricks at the sound of a trumpet. The flesh of bears was much esteemed by the ancients. They abound in Poland, Muscovy, Lithuania, and the great forests in Germany; and also in the remote northern countries, where the species is white. Calmet.

Call hither to the stake my two brave bears,
Bid Salisbury and Warwick come to me.—
—Are these thy bears? we'll bait thy bears to death,
And manacle the bearward in their chains. Shak. Henry VI.

Thou'dst shun a bear;
But if thy flight lay toward the roaring sea,
Thou'dst meet the bear i' th' mouth. Shakesp. King Lear.

2. The name of two constellations, called the greater and lesser bear; in the tail of the lesser bear, is the pole star.

E'en then when Troy was by the Greeks o'erthrown,
The bear oppos'd to bright Orion shone. Creech.

2. Any place of tumult or mirth.

BEAR-GARDEN. adj. A word used in familiar or low phrase for rude or turbulent; as, a bear-garden fellow, that is, a man rude enough to be a proper frequenter of the bear-garden. Bear-garden sport, is used for gross inelegant entertainment.

BEAR'S-BREECH. n. s. [acanthus.] The name of a plant.

The leaves are like those of the thistle; the flowers labiated; the under lip of the flower is divided into three segments, which, in the beginning, is curled up in the form of a tube, in the place of the under lip are produced the stamina, which support the pointals; the cup of the flowers is composed of prickly leaves, the upper part of which is bent over, like an arch, and supplies the defect of the upper lip of the flower; the fruit is of [illegible] form, divided in the middle into two cells, each containing one smooth seed. The species are, 1. The smooth-garden bear's-breech. 2. The prickly bear's-breech. 3. The middle bear's-breech, with short spines, &c. The first is used in medicine, and is supposed to be the mollis acanthus of Virgil. The leaves of this plant are cut upon the capitals of the Corinthian pillars, and were formerly in great esteem with the Romans. They are easily propagated by parting the roots in February or March, or by the seeds sown at the same time. Miller.

BEAR'S-

BEAR'S-EAR, or Auricula. [auricula urſi, Lat.] The name of a plant.

It hath a perennial root, the leaves are thicker and ſmoother than thoſe of the primroſe; the cup of the flower is ſhorter, ſo that the tube appears naked; the flower is ſhaped like a funnel; the upper part is expanded, and divided into five ſegments, this is ſucceeded by a globular ſeed-veſſel, containing many ſmall ſeeds; every year it produces vaſt quantities of new flowers, differing in ſhape, ſize, or colour; and there is likewiſe a great variety in the leaves of theſe plants. They flower in April, and ripen their ſeeds in June. Miller.

BEAR'S-EAR, or Sanicle. [cortuſa, Lat.]

This plant hath a perennial root, the leaves are roundiſh, rough, and crenated on the edges, like thoſe of ground ivy; the cup of the flower is ſmall, and divided into ſix parts, the flowers are ſhaped, like a funnel, cut at the top into many ſegments, and diſpoſed in an umbel, the fruit is roundiſh, terminating in a point, and is cloſely fixt in the cup, in which are contained many ſmall angular ſeeds. We have but one ſpecies of this plant, which is nearly allied to the auricula urſi, but the flowers are not quite ſo large and fair. It loſes its leaves in winter, but puts out new ones early in the ſpring; and, in April, it produces flowers, which are ſometimes ſucceeded by ſeed pods; but it is very rare that they perfect their ſeeds with Miller.

When misery could beguile the tyrant's rage,
And frustrate his proud will. Shakesp. King Lear.

3. To deceive pleasingly; to amuse.

With these sometimes she doth her time beguile;
These do by fits her phantasy possess. Sir J. Davies.

Sweet leave me here a while;
My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile
The tedious day with sleep. Hamlet.

BEGU'N. The participle passive of begin.

But thou bright morning star, thou rising sun,
Which in these latter times hast brought to light
Those mysteries, that, since the world begun,
Lay hid in darkness and eternal night. Sir J. Davies.

BEHA'LF n. s. [This word Skinner derives from half, and interprets it, for my half, as, for my part. It seems to me rather corrupted from behoof, profit, the pronunciation degenerating easily to behalf; which, in imitation of other words so founded, was written, by those who knew not the etymology, behalf.]

1. Favour; cause.

He was in confidence with those who designed the destruction of Strafford, against whom he had contracted some prejudice, in the behalf of his nation. Clarendon, b. v.

May thy billows roul aſhore
The beryl and the golden ore. Milton.
The beryl of our lapidaries is only a fine ſort of cornelian, of a more deep bright red, ſometimes with a caſt of yellow, and more tranſparent than the common cornelian
Woodward's Method of Foſſils

To BESCRE'EN. v. a. [from ſcreen.] To cover with a ſcreen, to ſhelter; to conceal

What man art thou, that thus beſcreen'd in night,
Stumbleſt on my counſel? Shakeſp. Romeo and Juliet.

BESE'ECH v. a. pret. I beſought, I have beſought [from ſecan, Sax. verſoeken, Dutch.]

1. To entreat, to ſupplicate, to implore; ſometimes before a perſon.

I beſeech you, Sir, pardon me; it is only a letter from my brother, that I have not all over read. Shakeſp. King Lear

I beſeech thee for my ſon Onelimus, whom I have begotten in my bonds. Philemon, 10.

I, in the anguiſh of my heart, beſeech you
To quit the dreadful purpoſe of your ſoul. Addiſon's Cato.

To beg, to aſk, before a thing.
